Ye shall offer a cake of the first of your dough for an heave offering, as ye do the heave offering of the threshing floor. Num.
- HEAVEN, n. f. [from heav, which seems to be derived from heave, the places over head, Saxon.]
1. The regions above; the expanse of the sky.
A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven kissing hill. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Thy race in time to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden's Æn.
The words are taken more properly for the air and ether than for the heavens, as the best Hebræans understand them.
This act, with shouts heav'n high, the friendly band Applaud. Dryden's Fables.

HEA

2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure souls departed.
It is a knoll
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
These, the late
Heav'n banish'd host, left desert utmost hell. Milton.
All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n fall'n, in station stood, or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.
Now heav'n help him! Shakespeare's King Lear.
The will
And high permission of all-ruling heav'n Left him at large. Milton.
The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophecy, as a testimony of their being sent by heaven. Temple.
4. The pagan gods; the celestial.
Our brows
No more obey the heavens than our courtiers. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Take physick, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
I hat thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just. Shakespeare's King Lear.
They can judge as fully of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Heav'n's! what a spirit was in his arms, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow. Eryd.
5. Elevation; sublimity.
O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heav'n of invention. Shakespeare's Henry V. Pro.
It is often used in composition
HEAVEN-BEGOTT. Begot by a celestial power.
If I am heav'n-begot, assert your son
By some sure sign. Dryden.
- HEAVEN-BORN. Descended from the celestial regions; nature of heaven.
If a fever fires his sulphurous blood,
In every fit he feels the hand of God,
And heav'n-born flame! Dryden's Fables, Sat. 13.
Oh heav'n-born filters! source of art!
Who charm the senses, or mend the heart;
Who lead fair virtue's train along,
Moral truth, and mystic song! Pope.
- HEAVEN-BRED. Produced or cultivated in heaven.
Much is the force of heav'n-bred poetry. Shakespeare.
- HEAVEN-BUILT. Built by the agency of gods.
My soul inspire,
As when we wrapt Troy's heav'n-built walls in fire. Pope.
His arms had wrought the destin'd fall
Of sacred Troy, and raz'd her heav'n-built wall. Pope.
- HEAVEN-DIRECTED.
1. Raised towards the sky.
Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise? Pope.
2. Taught by the powers of heaven.
O sacred weapon! left for truth's defence;
To all but heav'n-directed hands deny'd;
The muse may give it, but the gods must guide. Pope.
- HEAVENLY, adj. [from heaven.]
1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.
As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world make one become worldly. Steele.
Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;
Nor Pindar's heav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a swan. Dryden.
2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.
Adoring first the genius of the place,
Then earth, the mother of the heav'nly race. Dryden's Æn.
- HEAVENLY, adv.
1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.
In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns,
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.
2. By the agency or influence of heaven.
Truth and peace and love shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, whose happy-making sight alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.
- HEAVENWARD, adv. [from heav and ward, Saxon.] Towards heaven.
I prostrate lay,
By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mournful look Heav'nward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke. Prior.
- HEAVILY, adv. [from heavy.]
1. With great ponderousness.
Grievously; afflictively.
Ease must be impracticable to the envious: they lie under a double misfortune; common calamities and common mis-ings fall heavily upon them. Southey's

HEA

3. Sorrowfully; with an air of dejection.
I came hither to transport the tydings,
Which I have heavily born. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
—O, I have past a miserable night. Shakespeare's R. III.
This O'Neil took very heavily, because his condition in the army was less pleasant to him. Clarendon.
- HEAVINESS, n. f. [from heavy.]
1. Ponderousness; the quality of being heavy; weight.
The subject is concerning the heaviness of several bodies, or the proportion that is required betwixt any weight and the power which may move it. Wilkins.
2. Dejection of mind; depression of spirit.
We are, at the hearing of some, more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness, of some more mollified, and softened in mind.
Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop; but a good word maketh it glad. Prov. xii. 25.
Ye greatly rejoice; though now for a season ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations. 1 Pet. i. 6.
Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foretells the good event. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Let us not burthen our remembrance with An heaviness that's gone. Shakespeare's Tempest.
3. Inaptitude to motion or thought; sluggishness; torpidness;
dulness of spirit; languidness; languor.
Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
What means this heaviness that hangs upon me?
This lethargy that creeps through all my senses? Add. Cato.
He would not violate that sweet recess,
And found besides a welcome heaviness,
Which seiz'd his eyes. Dryden.
A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitu-tude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot on Aliment.
4. Oppression; crush; affliction.
5. Deepness or richness of soil.
As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some from other European ports, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce; such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbutnot on Coins.
- HEAVY, adj. [from heav, Saxon.]
1. Weighty; ponderous; tending strongly to the center; contrary to light.
Mercurius tells us, that a little child, with an engine of an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Wilkins.
2. Sorrowful; dejected; depressed.
Let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakespeare.
3. Grievous; oppressive; afflictive.
Menelaus bore an heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind. 2 Mac. v. 23.
Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviness found
That ever yet they heard. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Are you so gossip'd
To pray for this good man, and for his issue?
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
4. Wanting alacrity; wanting briskness of appearance.
My heavy eyes, you say, confess
A heart to love and grief inclin'd. Prior.
5. Wanting spirit or rapidity of sentiment; unanimated.
A work was to be done, a heavy writer to be encouraged, and accordingly many thousand copies were bespoke. Swift.
6. Wanting activity; indolent; lazy.
Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd;
But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind. Dryden's Fables.
7. Drowsy; dull; torpid.
Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep. Lu. ix. 33.
8. Slow; sluggish.
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
9. Stupid; foolish.
This heavy-headed revel, East and West
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations. Shakespeare.
I would not be accounted to base minded, or heavy-headed, that I will confess that any of them is for valour, power, or fortune better than myself. Kneller's History of the Turks.
I put into thy hands what has been the diversion of some of my idle and heavy hours. Locke's Epistle to the Reader.
When alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. Swift.
10. Loaded; incumbered; burthened.
Hearing that there were forces coming against him, and not

HEC

- willing that they should find his men heavy and laden with booty, he returned unto Scotland. Eaton's Henry VII.
12. Not easily digested; not light to the stomach.
Such preparations as retain the oil or fat, are most heavy to the stomach, which makes baked meat hard of digestion. Arb.
13. Rich in soil; fertile, as heavy lands.
14. Deep; cumbersome, as heavy roads.
- HEAVY, adv. As an adverb it is only used in composition; heavily.
Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the weary beast. If. xlv. 1.
Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Mat. ii. 28.
- HEBDOMAD, n. f. [hebdomas, Latin.] A week; a space of seven days.
Computing by the medical month, the first hebdomad or sep-tenary consists of six days, seventeen hours and a half. Brown.
- HEBDOMADAL, adj. [from hebdomas, Latin.] Weekly;
HEBDOMADARY, adj. [from hebdomas, Latin.] Weekly;
As for hebdomadal periods, or weeks, in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews. Brown.
- TO HEBETATE, v. a. [hebetas, Latin; hebetas, French.] To dull; to blunt; to stupify.
The eye, especially if hebetated, might cause the same perception. Harvey on Consumptions.
Beef may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son, but will hebetate and clog his intellects. Arb. and Pope's M. Scrib.
- HEBETATION, n. f. [from hebetate.]
1. The act of dulling.
2. The state of being dulled.
- HEBETUDE, n. f. [hebetudo, Latin.] Dulness; obtuseness; bluntness.
The pestilent seminaries, according to their grossness or subtlety, activity or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues. Harvey on the Plague.
- HEBRAISM, n. f. [hebraïsm, French; hebraïsmus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.
Milton has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Grecisms, and sometimes Hebraïsm, into his poem. Spectator.
- HEBRAIST, n. f. [hebraïst, Latin.] A man skilled in Hebrew.
- HEBRICIAN, n. f. [from Hebrew.] One skilful in Hebrew.
The words are more properly taken for the air or ether than the heavens, as the best Hebræans understand them. Kaleigh.
The nature of the Hebrew verse, as the meanest Hebræan knoweth, consists of uneven feet. Peacham.
- HECATOMB, n. f. [hecatombe, French; εκατόμβη, Greek.] A sacrifice of an hundred cattle.
In rich mens homes
I bid kill some beasts, but no hecatombs;
None starve, none surfeit so. Donne.
One of these three is a whole hecatomb,
And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.
Her triumphant sons in war succeed,
And slaughter'd hecatombs around 'em bleed. Addison.
- HECTICAL, adj. [hectique, French, from ἑκταίος.]
HECTICK, adj. [hectique, French, from ἑκταίος.]
1. Habitual; constitutional.
This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fulness from obstruction, because it is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.
A hectick fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance, not to be controul'd. Donne.
2. Troubled with a morbid heat.
No hectick student fears the gentle maid. Taylor.
- HECTICK, n. f. An hectick fever.
Like the hectick in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- HECTOR, n. f. [from the name of Hector, the great Homeric warrior.]
1. A bully; a blustering, turbulent, perversive, noisy fellow.
Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. Southey's Sermons.
We'll take one cooling cup of neclat,
And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.
- TO HECTOR, v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.
They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of it. Government of the Tongue.
The weak low spirit, fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when hectored by the brave. Dryden.
An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectering his servants, and calling for supper. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

HED

- TO HEDGEON. v. n. To play the bully; to bluffer.
They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and bed-ringing, others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.
One would think the hedgering, the storming, the fullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Swift.
Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants hedger. Swift.
HEDERA'CEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy. Diët.
HEDGE. n. f. [hæge, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes.
It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.
The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.
Through the verdant maze
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.
HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.
There are five in the first shew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.
The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.
A person, who, by his stile and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-priest in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.
TO HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To inclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing. Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecluf. xxviii. 24.
Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon, Essay 47.
2. To obstruct.
I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hof. ii. 6.
3. To incircle for defence.
England, beds'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakef. King John.
There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That reason can but peep to what it would. Shakef. Hamlet.
4. To shut up within an inclosure.
It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange? Locke.
5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.
Bay not me,
I'll not endure it: you forget yourself
To hedge me in: I am a soldier. Shakef. Julius Cæsar.
When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer:
I pry'thee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise; for thy life preserv'd. Dryden.
When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift's Directions to the Postman.
TO HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.
I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you rogue will enscorne your rage, your catamountain looks, your red-lettice phrases. Shakespeare.
HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shak. Hen. VI.
HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.
HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [hedge and hog.]
1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in an hedge.
Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their prickles at my foot-fall. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience,
The collyrium of Albertus; that is, to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under part, head, belly and legs, within his thickest of prickles. Ray on the Creation.
2. A term of reproach.
Didst thou not kill this king?
—I grant ye.
—Do'st grant me, hedge-hog? Shakef. Richard III.
3. A plant. Ainsworth.
4. The globe-fish. Ainsworth.

HEE

- HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. f. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willow-wort.
Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill's Mat. Medica.
HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. f. A plant.
The flower has four leaves, expanded in a crucial form: the point becomes a long, slender, bivalve pod, divided by a partition into two cells, which contain many round seeds. The species are five. Miller.
HEDGE-NETTLE. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.
HEDGE-NOTE. n. f. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.
When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant railery. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.
HEDGE-PIG. n. f. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.
Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd,
Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakef. Macbeth.
HEDGE-ROW. n. f. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.
Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.
The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Ezekiel to Pope.
HEDGE-SPARROW. n. f. [hedge and sparrow.] A sparrow that lives in bushes.
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakef. K. Lear.
HEDGING-BILL. n. f. [hedge and bill.] A cutting hook used in making hedges.
Comes master Dametas with a hedging-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Sidney.
HE'DGER. n. f. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.
The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the twink'd hedger at his supper sat. Milton.
He would be laugh'd at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past fifty. Locke.
TO HEE. v. a. [heban, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.
With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dryden.
He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed all the parts of it. Locke.
HEED. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Care; attention.
With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running,
Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.
Thou must take heed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison's Cato.
2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.
Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.
3. Care to avoid.
We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson's Sermon.
4. Notice; observation.
Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.
5. Seriousness; steadfastness.
He did unfeign them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance. Shakef. Henry VIII.
6. Regard; respectful notice.
It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no heed is given to what he says. L'Estrange.
HE'EDFUL. adj. [from heed.]
1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.
Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgments join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakef. Hamlet.
2. Attentive; careful; observing.
I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late ent'ring at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shak. H. VI.
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shakespeare.
Thou, heedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope's Odyssey.
HE'EDFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.
Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor.

HEF

- structor, and heedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.
HE'EDFULNESS. n. f. [from heedful.] Caution; vigilance; attention.
HE'EDILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly. Diët.
HE'EDINESS. n. f. Caution; vigilance. Diët.
HE'EDLESS. adj. [from heed.] Negligent; inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unobserving.
The heedless lover does not know
Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Waller.
Heedless of verse, and hopeless of the crown,
Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown.
Some ideas, which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Locke.
HE'EDLESSLY. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.
Whilst ye discharge the duty of matrimony, ye heedlessly slide into sin. Abulmot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.
HE'EDLESSNESS. n. f. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.
In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be piteous, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedlessness. Locke.
HEEL. n. f. [pele, Saxon.]
1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.
He calls to mind his strength, and then his speed,
His winged heels, and then his armed head;
With these 'er avoid, with that his fate to meet;
But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet. Denham.
If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone. Wijeman's Surgery.
2. The whole foot of animals.
Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. Addison's Guardian.
3. The feet, as employed in flight.
Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tygers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for't. L'Estrange's Fables.
4. To be at the HEELS. To pursue closely; to follow hard.
Sir, when comes your book forth?
—Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakef. Timon.
But is there no sequel at the heels of this Mother's admiration? Shakef. Hamlet.
Could we break our way
By force, and at our heels all hell should rise
With blackest insurrection, to confound Heaven's purrl light. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
5. To pursue as an enemy.
The Spaniards fled on towards the North to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels, until they were fain to give them over for want of powder. Bacon.
Want! hungry want! that hungry meagre fiend,
Is at my heels, and chases me in view. Otway.
6. To follow close as a dependent.
Through proud London he came fighting on,
After th' admired heels of Bolingbroke. Shakef. Henry IV.
7. To lay by the HEELS. To fetter; to shackle; to put in gyves.
If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all
By th' heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round fines for neglect. Shakef. Henry VIII.
One half of man, his mind,
Is, sui juris, unconfin'd,
And cannot be laid by the heels. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.
I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummies; and wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heel. Addison's Freeholder.
8. Anything shaped like a heel.
At the other side is a kind of heel or knob, to break clots with. Mortimer's Husbandry.
9. The back part of a stocken: whence the phrase to be out at heel, to be worn out.
I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle:
A good man's fortune may grow out at heel. Shak. K. Lear.
TO HEEL. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To dance.
I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk. Shakespeare.
2. To lean on one side: as, the ship heels.
HEELER. n. f. [from heel.] A cock that strikes well with his heels.
HE'EL-PIECE. n. f. [heel and piece.] A piece fixed on the hinder part of the shoe, to supply what is worn away.

Some blamed Mrs. Bull for new heel-piecing her shoes. Arb.
HE'EL. n. f. [from heel.]
1. Heaving; effort.
May be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink; depart,

HEI

- And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge
Is not infected: but if one present
Th' abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent hefts. Shakef. Winter's Tale.
2. [For heft.] Handle.
His oily side devours both blade and heft. Waller.
HE'GIRA. n. f. HEREAFTER. n. f. A future state.
'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.
I still shall wait
Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.
HEREAT. adv. [here and at.] At this.
One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean. Hooker, b. ii.
HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this.
In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.
Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Ercwin.
The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment: hereby we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.
HERE-DITABLE. adj. [heredes, Latin.] Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.
Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditary, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Locke.
HEREDITAMENT. n. f. [hereditum, Latin.] A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.
HERE-DITARY. adj. [hereditaire, French; hereditarius, Lat.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.
To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shaksp. Henry V.
These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shaksp. Henry V.
He shall ascend
The throne hereditary, and bound his reign
With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heav'ns. Milt.
Thus while the mute creation downward bend
Their fight, and to their earthly mother tend,
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden's Ovid.
When heroic virtue his youth shall raise,
And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden's Virgil.
HERE-DITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.] By inheritance.
Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily. Pope to Swift.
HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.
How highly soever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us. Hooker, b. v.
My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shaksp. Henry V.
Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. Saut.
HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.
Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.
HEREOF. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.
Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shaksp. Henry V.
HEREON. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.
If we should strictly insist hereon, the possibility might fall into question. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
HEREOUT. adv. [here and out.]
1. Out of this place.
A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,
Here-out up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.
2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.
HEREMITICAL. adj. [It should be written eremitical, from eremite, of ignu, a desert; heremique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.
You describe to well your heremical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.
HERESY. n. f. [heresie, French; heresis, Latin; hairesis.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholic and orthodox church.
Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker, b. iii.
As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon mens wits; yet they do not produce any great alterations in states. Ercwin, Essay 59.

HER

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissoluty. King Charles.
HERESIARCH. n. f. [heresiarchus, French; ἡρεσιάρχης and ἡρεσιάρχης.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of heretics.
 The pope declared him not only an heretic, but an heresiarch.
HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, Fr. ἡρετικός.] One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church.
 I rather will suspect the sun with cold
 Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
 In him that was of late an heretick,
 As firm as faith. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.
 No hereticks desire to spread
 Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.
 Bellarmine owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father.
 When a Papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watson's Logick.
HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.
 How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who in their opinion not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.
 Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.
HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.
HERETO. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.
HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.
 Lord Amphialus, said she, I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.
 So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South's Sermons.
 We now can form no more
 Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.
HERETO. adv. [here and unto.] To this.
 They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that who so assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
 Agreeable hereto might not be amiss to make children, as soon as they are capable of it, often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.
HERWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this.
 You, fair sir, be not herewith dismayed,
 But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Pai. Queen.
Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surpris'd by the Scots. Hayward.
HERIOT. n. f. [heriot, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.
 This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessor of the ivy, but the olive dispeneth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Howell's Vocal Forest.
 Though thou consume but to renew,
 Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleave and.
 I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryden's D. n. Sebastian.
HERITABLE. adj. [heres, Latin.] A person that may inherit whatever may be inherited.
 By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale's Common Law.
HERITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]
 1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.
 Let us our father's heritage divide. Hubbard's Tale.
 He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that carries but a day. Rogers's Sermons.
 2. [In divinity.] The people of God.
 O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage. Com. Pr.
HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [hermaprodite, French, from ἑρμῆς and ἀφροδίτη.] An animal uniting two sexes.
 Man and wife make but one right Canonical hermaprodite. Cleveland.
 Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaprodites. Arbutnot, and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaprodite.] Partaking of both sexes.
 There may be equivocal seeds and hermaproditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HERMETICAL. adj. [from Hermes, or Mercury, the supposed inventor of chymistry; hermetica, French.] Chymical.
 An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass 'till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quincy.
 The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Boyle.
HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chymical art.
 He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there. Bentley.
HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremita, eremita.] 1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.
 A wither'd hermit, five-score Winters worn,
 Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.
 You were pleased to lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 He had been duke of Savoy, and after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison on Italy.
 Come, inspiration, from thy hermit seat,
 By mortals seldom found. Thomson's Summer.
 2. A headman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.
 For those of old,
 And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
 We rest your hermit. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.
 By that painful way they pass
 Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
 On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
 And eke a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 Go with speed
 To some forlorn and naked hermitage, Remote from all the pleasures of the world. Shakespeare.
 And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may fit and rightly spell
 Of every star that heav'n doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew.
 About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison on Italy.
HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.
HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.
HERMODACTYL. n. f. [ἑρμώδης and δάκτυλος.] Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots, which we have, are a gentle purge; but they are now little used. Fell's Mat. Med.
HERN. n. f. [Contracted from HERON, which see.]
 Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern. Peacocks on Drawing.
HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb.
HERNIA. n. f. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.
 A hernia would certainly succeed. Wise's Surgery.
HERO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.]
 1. A man eminent for bravery.
 In which were held, by sad decease,
 Heroes and heroines. Chapman's Odyssey.
 I sing of heroes and of kings,
 In mighty numbers mighty things. Cavalier.
 Heroes in animated marble frown.
 In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope's Odyssey, N. 11.
 These are thy honours, not that here thy bust
 Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust. Pope.
 Heroes, kings, Waller.
 Joy thy wish'd approach to see.
 2. A man of the highest class in any respect.
HEROESS. n. f. [from hero; heroi, Latin.] A heroine; a female hero.
 In which were held, by sad decease,
 Heroes and heroesses. Chapman's Odyssey.
HEROICAL.

HER

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Besitting an hero; heroic.
 Musidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprises. Sidney, b. ii.
 Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden's Tables, Dedication.
HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to an hero.
 Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney, b. ii.
 Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;
 And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.
HEROICK. adj. [from hero; heraiques, French.]
 1. Productive of heroes.
 Bolingbroke
 From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree, Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
 2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.
 Not that which justly gives heroick name
 To person, or to poem. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
 Verse makes heroick virtue live,
 But you can lift to verses give. Waller.
 3. Reciting the acts of heroes.
 Methinks heroick poetry, 'till now,
 Like some fantastick fairy land did show. Cowley.
 I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and success of a most just and necessary war. Dryden's Ann. Mirab. Preface.
 An heroick poem is the greatest which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.
HEROICLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.
 Samson hath quit himself
 Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
 A life heroick. Milton's Agonistes.
HEROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heros.
 But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
 New-strung, and stiffer bent her foster soul;
 The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
 Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.
 Then shall the British stage
 More noble characters expose to view,
 And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.
HEROISM. n. f. [herojisme, French.] The qualities or character of an hero.
 If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Braune's Notes to the Odyssey.
HERON. n. f. [heron, French.]
 1. A bird that feeds upon fish.
 So lords, with sport of flag and heron full,
 Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull.
 The heron, when the soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.
 2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.
 The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
 Who terror bears upon his soaring wing;
 Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
 And lusty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.
HERONRY. n. f. [from heron; commonly pronounced hern.]
HERONSHAW. n. f. [heron, Saxon.] A place where herons breed.
 They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham's Physico-Theology.
HERPES. n. f. [ἑρπης.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pityriasis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers, if not timely taken care of.
 A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens. Wise's Surgery.
HERRING. n. f. [hering, French; hering, Saxon.] A small sea-fish.
 The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackerel, and cod. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 Buy my hering fresh. Swift.
HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers.
 How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;
 If so, my eyes are often wash'd than hers. Shakespeare.
 Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
 For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.
 I see her rowling eyes;
 And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
 With words not hers, and more than human sound,
 She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Rowson.
HERSE. n. f. [herse, low Latin; supposed to come from herse, to praise.]
 1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

HET

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.
 When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,
 Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Rosam.
 Crowds of dead in decent pomp are born;
 Their friends attend the herse, the next relations mourn. Dryden's Virgil's Georg. b. iv.
 On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
 And frequent herse shall besiege your gates. Pope.
TO HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into an herse.
 I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were herse'd at my foot, and the jewels in her coffin. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
 The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corpse,
 And herse'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman's Lucretius.
 The house is herse'd about with a black wood,
 Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree:
 Each flower's a pregnant poison, try'd and good;
 Each herb a plague. Cragshaw.
HERSELF. pronoun. The female personal pronoun, in the oblique cases reciprocal.
 The jealous o'er worn widow and herself,
 Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
 Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
 The more she looks, the more I fear increase,
 At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.
HERSELF. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals.
 Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herself like airs as carols. Bacon.
TO HERSE. v. a. [herian, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.
 Thenot, now nis the time of merrymake,
 Nor Pan to herse, nor with love to play;
 Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
 Or Summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Past.
 Thenceforth it firmly was established,
 And for Apollo's honour highly herse'd. Fairy Queen.
 But were thy years green as now be mine,
 Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,
 And herse with hymns thy last's glove. Spenser.
HERSITANCE. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.
 The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.
 Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to shew that they believed their own reasonings. Aitken's Sermons.
TO HERSTATE. v. a. [hersto, Latin; hersto, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.
 A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Braune's Notes on the Iliad.
 Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
 Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
 Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
 A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.
HERSITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.]
 1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.
 I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each person. Woodward's Natural History.
 2. Intermision of speech; want of volubility.
 Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Waller.
HERST. n. f. [herst, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction.
 If thou be the most kind preserver
 Of living wights, the sovereign lord of all,
 How falls it then, that, with thy furious fervour,
 Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
 As him that doth thy lovely herst despise. Spenser.
 Thou wast a spirit too delicate
 To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
 Refusing her grand herst. Shakespeare's Tempest.
HETEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclite, Fr. heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτεροκλίτης and κλίτης.]
 1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke's Let. Gram.
 The heteroclitic nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Waller.
 2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.
HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from heteroclitic.] Deviating from the common rule.
 Of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HETERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἑτεροδοξα and ἑτεροδοξία.]
 Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality

HEX

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HETEROPOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar. Locke.
Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HETEROGENEAL. adj. [heterogenes, French; heteros and genos.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneous towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Eneid's Natural History.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whole rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton's Opt.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heterogenitis, Fr. from heterogeneous.] 1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.
Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is fequettered into ashes and foot; whereas the same wood, distilled in a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [heteros and genos.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have with great care observed the condition of such heterogeneous bodies, which I found immerged and included in the mists of this fundstone. Woodward.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heteros and genos.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropic fall at noon always to the North.

To HEV. v. a. part. hewen or hewed. [hewen, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut with an edged instrument; to hack.
Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.
One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.
Scarcely can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint. Shakespeare.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryd. Fallis.

3. To fell, as with an ax.
He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. Shakespeare, H. VI.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.

He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton's Parad. Lost.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe.
Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. Is. xxii. 16.

Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. K. Ch.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.

Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone. Adert.

5. To form laboriously.
The gate was adamant; eternal frame!
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new. Pope to Swift.

HEWEN. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourcore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French; hex and gonia.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray on the Creation.

HEXAGONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or hexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians? Erasm. against Hides.

HID

HEXAMETER. n. f. [hex and metron.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroic. Dryden.

HEXANGULAR. adj. [hex and angulus, Latin.] Having six corners.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal, of various sizes, some clear, and others a little soiled. Woodward on Fossils.

HEXAPOD. n. f. [hex and podis.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Ray on the Creation.

HEXASTICK. n. f. [hex and stick.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation; the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the wood with peaceful lyrics;
Then hey for praise and panegyric. Prior.

HEYDAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolic and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

'Tis not I say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such heyday wit in purling him. Shakespeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday! Mudibras, p. i.

HEYDAY. n. f. A frolic; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HEYDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolic dance.

But friendly fairies met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
With heydegives, and timely tredden traces. Spenser.

HIA-TION. n. f. [from hia, Latin.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open his mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the great needs of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HIA-TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.] 1. An aperture; a breach.

Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below open into and communicates with the sea. Mason.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.

HIERONAL. adj. [hiernus, Latin.] Belonging to the Winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the Winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hiernal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [corrupted, I fancy, from hic and doctus, this or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dark,
At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
And hicci doctus play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
He had been both friend and foe to crimes. T. T. Travels.

HICCOUGH. n. f. [hic, Latin.] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if she had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cleveland.

Sneezing cureth the hiccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If the stomach be hurt, singultus or hiccough follows, with vomiting and nausea. H. J. Travels.

To HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To fob with a convulsed stomach.

To HICUP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To fob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up.
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hiccup. Mudibras, p. ii.

HICKWALL. n. f. A bird.

HIDDEN. part. pass. of hide.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renowned on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope's Ep.

To HIDE. v. a. preter. hid; part. pass. hid or lidd. [from hiden, Saxon.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avaunt, and quit my fight; let the earth hide thee! Shakespeare.

HID

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Nile hears him knocking at his hid fold gates,
And seeks his hidden springs, and fears his nephews fates. Dr.

Thus the fire of gods and men below:
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The hid parts lay hidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my corps a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted fources of perfection? Addison.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
Is filled with peace. Rowe's Royal Convert.

To HIDE. v. n. To lye hid; to be concealed.

A fox, that had been hard run, begged of a countryman, at work in a wood, to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairer in the shade:
Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride, Weakness or delicacy. Pope.

HIDE AND SEEK. n. f. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Gulliver's Travels.

HIDE. n. f. [hiden, Saxon; haude, Dutch.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon pass
Through nine bull hides, each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.

Pilistratus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope's Odyssey.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tiger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shakespeare.

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, hyde, French; hida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till.] Ainsworth.

One of the first things was the perfecting of the Winchester book, being a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Watton.

HIDEBOUND. adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from over-riding, or a surfeit. Farriers Dict.

2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon's Natural History.

Like fatted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

And still the harsher and hidebound,
The damfels prove, become the fonder. Mudibras, p. ii.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious. Ainsworth.

HIDEOUS. adj. [hideus, French.] Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney, b. ii.

Thou echo'st me,
As if there were some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be shewn. Shakespeare's Othello.

I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back rebounded death. Milton.

Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her curling snakes with hissing form return;
Her curling snakes with hissing form return;
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden's Æn.

'Tis forced through the hiatus at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward's Natural History.

HIDEOUSLY. adv. [from hideous.] Horribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

HIE

This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.

HIDEOUSNESS. n. f. [from hideus.] Horribleness; dreadful-ness; terrour.

HIDER. n. f. [from the verb.] He that hides.

To HIE. v. n. [hiesan, Saxon.] 1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 2.

In a fair moon-shine night thither he hies to dig it up. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shakespeare.

Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shak. Ju. Cæs.

Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel's Civ. War.

The snake no sooner hift,
But virtue heard it, and away she hie'd. Crashaw.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge, Accurs'd, and in a curld hour, he hies. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster thither hie'd him. Crashaw.

HIERARCH. n. f. [hierarch, and arch, hierarque, Fr.] The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milt. Parad. Lost.

HIERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchique, French; from hierarch.] Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

HIERARCHY. n. f. [hierarchie, French, from hierarch.] 1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings:

Out of the hierarchies of angels shewn,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairfax, b. i.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

These the supreme king
Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright. Milton's Par. Lost.

Jehova, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchy,
The world survey'd. Sandys.

The blessed of mortal wights, now questionless the highest faint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hawel's Vocal Forest.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

While the old levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices. South.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops. Swift.

HIEROGLYPH. n. f. [hieroglyph, French; hieros, sacred, glyphos, to carve.]

HIEROGLYPHICK. n. f. [hieroglyphique, French; hieros, sacred, glyphos, to carve.] 1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The first writing they used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick. Woodward.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign those animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the hieroglyphick.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble. Sandys's Travels.

Th' Egyptian serpent figures time,
And, stripp'd, returns into his prime;
If my affection thou would'st win,
First cast thy hieroglyphick skin. Cleveland.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, tion, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality.

HIG

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically of the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. f. [ἱερός and γραφή.] Holy writing.
HIEROPHANT. n. f. [ἱερόφάνης.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people.

To HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology; probably corrupted from haggle.]
1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends.
Bale thou art!

To higgle thus for a few blows,
To gain thy knight an opulent spouse.

Why all this higgle with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning.

HIGGLERY-PIGGLERY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER. n. f. [from higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH. adj. [heah, Saxon; hoog, Dutch.]
1. Long upwards; rising above from the surface, or from the centre.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Their anodes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft.
High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being.

3. Exalted in nature.
4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.
O mortals! blind in fate, who never know
To bear high fortune, or endure the low.

5. Exalted in sentiment.
Solomon liv'd at ease, nor aimed beyond
Higher design than to enjoy his state.

6. Difficult; abstruse.
They meet to hear, and answer such high things.

His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty.
The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter.

9. Severe; oppressive.
When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen.

10. Noble; illustrious.
Trust me, I am exceeding weary.
—Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attacked to high blood.—It doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it.

11. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.
More ships in calms on a deceitful coast,
Or unfeen rocks, than in high storms are lost.

Spiders cannot easily weave their nets in a high wind.
At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;
Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury.

12. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.
Not only tears
Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within,
Began to rise; high passions, anger,
Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, took fore
Their inward state of mind.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spirit in human woe?

13. Full; complete.

HIG

High time now 'gan it wax for Una fair,
To think of those her captive parents dear.

Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you?
High time it is this war now ended were.

It was high time to do so; for it was now certain, that forces were already upon their march towards the West.

14. Strong tasted; gufful.
Solomon liv'd at ease, and full
Of honour, wealth, high fare, aim'd not beyond
Higher design than to enjoy his state.

15. Advancing in latitude from the line.
They are forced to take their course either high to the North, or low to the South.

16. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as, by the sun it is high noon.

17. Far advanced into antiquity.
The nominal observation of the several days of the week, is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who named the same according to the seven planets.

18. Dear; exorbitant in price.
If they must be good at so high a rate, they know they may be safe at a cheaper.

19. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.
HIGH. n. f. High place; elevation; superiour region.
Which when the king of gods beheld from high,
He sigh'd.

On high. Aloft; above; into superiour regions.
Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high,
With adamantine columns threatens the sky.

High is much used in composition with variety of meaning.
HIGH-BLEST. adj. Supremely happy.
The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends;
But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n

So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will,
Hard to believ may seem.

HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.
I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many Summers on a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me, and now has left me,
Wearied, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.

HIGH-BORN. Of noble extraction.
Cast round your eyes
Upon the high-born beauties of the court;
There chuse some worthy partner of your heart.

HIGH-BUILT. adj.
1. Of lofty stature.

The giant Harapha of Gath; his look Haughty as is his pile, high-built and proud.

2. Covered with lofty buildings.
In dreadful wars
The high-built elephant his castle rears,
Looks down on man below, and strikes the stars.

HIGH-COLOURED. Having a deep or glaring colour.
If a fever happens in a rancid oily state of blood, it produces a scorbutick fever, with high-coloured urine, and spots in the skin.

HIGH-DESIGNING. Having great schemes.
His warlike mind, his soul devoid of fear,
His high-designing thoughts were figur'd there.

HIGH-FE'D. Pampered.
A favourite mule, high-fed, and in the pride of flesh and metal, would still be bragging of his family.

HIGH-FLAMING. Throwing the flame to a great height.
Hecatombs of bulls to Neptune slain,
High-flaming, please the monarch of the main.

HIGH-FLYER. n. f. One that carries his opinions to extravagance.
She openly professeth herself to be a high-flyer; and it is not improbable the may also be a papist at heart.

HIGH-FLOWN. adj. [from high and flown, from fly.]
1. Elevated; proud.
This stiff neck pride nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend.

2. Turgid; extravagant.
This fable is a high-flown hyperbole upon the miseries of marriage.

HIGH-FLYING. Extravagant in claims or opinions.
Clip the wings
Of their high-flying arbitrary kings.

HIGH-HE'FED. adj.
1. Covered with high piles.

The

HIG

The plenteous board high-beap'd with cates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine.

2. Raised into high piles.

By the high-bung taper's light,
I could discern his cheeks were glowing red.

HIGH-METTLED. Proud or ardent of spirit.
He fails not in these to keep a stiff rein on a high-mettled Pegasus; and takes care not to surfeit here, as he had done on other heads, by an erroneous abundance.

HIGH-MINDED. Proud; arrogant.
My breast I'll burst with training of my courage,
But I will chastise this high-minded trumpet.

HIGH-PRINCIPLED. Extravagant in notions of politics.
This seems to be the political creed of all the high-principled men I have met with.

HIGH-RED. Deeply red.
Oil of turpentine, though clear as water, being digested upon the purely white fugar of lead, has in a short time afforded a high-red tincture.

HIGH-REASONED. Piquant to the palate.
Be sparing also of salt in the seasoning of all his victuals, and use him not to high-seasoned meats.

HIGH-SIGHTED. Always looking upwards.
Let high-sighted tyranny range on,
'Till each man drop by lottery;
But if these countrymen bear fire enough,
What need we any spur but our own cause?

HIGH-SPIRITED. Bold; daring; insolent.
HIGH-STOMACHED. Obstinate; lofty.
High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;
In rage, deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Of this day's journey; and from nine 'till twelve,
Is three long hours.

HIGHNESS. n. f. [from high.]
1. Elevation above the surface.
2. The title of princes, anciently of kings.
Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than that your highness offer'd.

How long in vain had nature striv'd to frame
A perfect prince, ere her highness came?

Beauty and greatness are eminently joined in your royal highness.

3. Dignity of nature; supremacy.
Destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure.

HIGHT. [This is an imperfect verb, used only in the preterite tense with a passive signification: paran, to call, Saxon; hiffen, to be called, German.]

HIL

1. Was named; was called.

The city of the great king hight it well,
Wherein eternal peace and happiness doth dwell.

2. It is sometimes used as a participle passive, and signifies called; named. It is now obsolete, except in burlesque writings.
Amongst the rest a good old woman was,
Hight mother Hubbard.

HIGHWATER. n. f. [from high and water.] The utmost flow of the tide.
They have a good way in Essex of draining of lands that lie below the highwater, and that are something above the low-water mark.

HIGHWAY. n. f. [from high and way.] Great road; publick path.
So few there be
That chuse the narrow path, or seek the right:
All keep the broad highway, and take delight
With many rather for to go astray.

Two inscriptions give a great light to the histories of Appian, who made the highway, and of Fabius the dictator.

Ent'ring on a broad highway,
Where power and titles scatter'd lay,
He strove to pick up all he found.

I could mention more trades we have lost, and are in the highway to lose.

HIGHWAYMAN. n. f. [from highway and man.] A robber that plunders on the publick roads.
'Tis like the friendship of pickpockets and highwaymen, that observe strict justice among themselves.

HIGHWAY. n. f. An herb.
HILARITY. n. f. [from hilaritas, Latin.] Merriment; gaiety.
Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence from wine.

HILD. in Etrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: so Hildebert is a noble lord; Mahild, an heroic lady; and in the same sense is Wiga also found.

HILDING. n. f. [from hild, Saxon, signifies a lord: perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hinderling, degenerate.]
1. A forry, paltry, cowardly fellow.
He was some hilding fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on.

If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

You are curb'd from that enlargement by
The consequence o' th' crown, and must not foil
The precious note of it with a base slave,
A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth.

This idle toy, this hilding scorns my power,
And sets us all at naught.

2. It is used likewise for a mean woman.
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots.

HILL. n. f. [hil, Saxon.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.
My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;
Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love.

Jerusalem is seated on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned side to side.

Three sides are sure imbar'd with crags and hills,
The rest is easy, scant to rise o'py'd;
But mighty bulkwarks fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art.

When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill, looks round to view.

A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral, which, by a plastic virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow.

HILLOCK. n. f. [from hill.] A little hill.
Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:
What, judge you, doth a hillock show by the lofty Olympus!

Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green.

This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions.

HILLY. adj. [from hill.] Full of hills; unequal in the surface.
Towards the hilly corners of Druiua remain yet her very Aborigenes, fatally thrust amongst an assembly of mountains.

Climbing

HIN

Climbing to a billy steep,
He views his herds in vales afar. Dryden
Lo! how the Norick plains
Rife billy, with large piles of slaughter'd knights. Phillips Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, tho' aman would chuse to travel through a plain one. Addison HILT. n. f. [hilt, Saxon, from heilan, to hold.] The handle of anything, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry and his followers. Shakeſp. Henry V.
Take thou the hilt,
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar
Be his this sword, whose blade of brads displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze. Pope's Odyssey
HIM. [him, Saxon.]

1. The oblique case of he.
Me he reſtor'd unto my office, and him he hanged. Gen. xli.
2. Him was anciently uſed for it in a neutral ſenſe.
HIMSELF. pron. [him and ſelf.]
1. In the nominative the ſame as he, only more emphatical.
It was a ſparing ſpeech of the ancients to ſay, that a friend is another himſelf; for that a friend is far more than himſelf. Bacon

With ſhame remembers, while himſelf was one
Of the ſame herd, himſelf the ſame had done. Denham
2. In ancient authors it is uſed neutrally for itſelf.
She is advanc'd
Above the clouds as high as heav'n himſelf. Shakeſp.
3. In the oblique caſes it has a reciprocal ſignification.
I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil diſpoſi-tion made him ſeek his death; but a provoking merit, ſet awork by a reprovable badneſs in himſelf. Shakeſp. K. Lear
4. It is ſometimes not reciprocal.

Nothing in nature can ſo peculiarly gratify the noble diſpoſitions of humanity, as for one man to ſee another ſo much himſelf as to ſigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to ſing his joys, and do and feel every thing by ſympathy. South
HIN. n. f. [hin, Saxon.] A meaſure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil. Ex. xxix. 40.
HIND. adj. compar. binder; ſupel. hindmoſt. [hynban, Saxon.]
Backward; contrary in poſition to the face: as, hind legs. See HINDER and HINDMOST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back ſo far 'till its head comes to touch its hind part, and ſo with its armour gathers itſelf into a ball. Ray on the Creation
The ſtag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they ſound like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope

HIND. n. f. [hinn, Saxon, from hinnus, Latin.]
1. The ſhe to a ſtag; the female of red deer.
How he flew, with glancing dart amiſs,
A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Can'ſt thou mark when the hinds do calve? Job xxxix. 1.
Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,
Not though the brazen-footed hind he flew. Dryden's Æn.

2. [hine, Saxon.] A ſervant.
A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their miſtreſs, to carry me in the name of foul cloaths to Datchet-lane. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor
3. [hine, Saxon.] A peafant; a boor; a mean ruſtick.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,
To reap the harveſt their ripe ears did yield,
Now look like thoſe, when rolling thunders roar,
And ſheets of lightning blaſt the ſtanding field. Dryden
He cloth'd himſelf in coarſe array,
A lab'ring hind in ſlew. Dryden's Fables

HINDERRIES. n. f. The ſame as raspberries. Ainſworth
TO HINDER. v. a. [hynban, Saxon.] To obſtruct; to ſtop; to let; to impede.

Hinder me not, ſeeing the Lord hath proſper'd my way.
Gen. xxiv. 56.

The whole world ſhined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labour. Wiſd. xvii. 20.
You minims of hindring knot-grafs made;
You bead, you acorn. Shakeſp. Mid. Night's Dream
If the alms were hindered only by intreaty, the hinderer is not tied to reſtitution, becauſe intreaty took not liberty away from the giver. Taylor's Rule of living holy

This objection hinders not but that the heroic action of ſome commander, enterpriſed for the Chriſtian cauſe, and executed happily, may be written. Dryden's Jew. Dedicat.

What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the ſame right? Locke HINDER. adj. [from hind.] That which is in a poſition contrary to that of the face.

HIN

Theſe beaſts, fighting with any man, ſtand upon their hinder feet, and ſo this did, being ready to give me a ſhrewd embracement. Sidney, b. i.

As the hinder feet of the horſe ſtuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himſelf from ſliding off his back. Addiſon's Guardian HINDERANCE. n. f. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; ſtop; obſtruction.

False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices againſt the hinderances of them, and thoſe practices new opinions more pernicious than the firſt; yea, moſt extremely ſometimes oppoſite to the firſt. Hooker, Preface
They muſt be in every Chriſtian church the ſame, except mere impoſſibility of ſo having it be the hinderance. Hooker
What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done? Dryden's Duſſon

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One ſoul ſhould both inſpire, and neither prove His fellow's hind'rance in purſuit of love? Dryden
He muſt conquer all theſe difficulties, and remove all theſe hinderances out of the way that leads to juſtice. Antony HINDERER. n. f. [from hinder.] He or that which hinders or obſtructs.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow. May HINDERLING. n. f. [from hind or hinder.] A paltry, worthleſs, degenerate animal.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word ſeems to be leſs proper than hindmoſt.] Hindmoſt; laſt; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremoſt, and Leſh and her children after, and Rachel and Joſeph hindmoſt. Gen.
Like to an enter'd tide, they all ruſh by,
And leave you hindmoſt. Shakeſp. Troilus and Crefſida

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and moſt.] The laſt; the lag; that which comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmoſt man,
Whate'er occaſion keeps him from us now. Shakeſp. H. VI.
He met thee by the way, and ſmote the hindmoſt of thee, even all that were feeble behind. Deutr. xxv. 18.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages caſt,
The firſt of this, and hindmoſt of the laſt,
A loſing gameſter. Dryden's Aurenga. Prologue

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmoſt, hell—he ſaid, and run. Pope

HINGE. n. f. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]
1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

At the gate
Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate ſelf-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning. Milton's Paradisè Loſt, b. v.
Then from the hinges their ſtrokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force. Denham
Heav'n's imperious queen ſhot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. The cardinal points of the world, Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South.
If when the moon is in the hinge at Eaſt,
The birth breaks forward from its native reſt;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This ſtation gives. Creech's Manilius
And theſe being hinges of the world, create
New powers in ſtars. Creech's Manilius

3. A governing rule or principle.
The other hinge of puniſhment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, ſhould pay the third part of their revenue. Templ.

4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a ſtate of irregularity and diſorder.
The man's ſpirit is out of order and off the hinges; and 'till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually diſ-quieted. Villotjon, Sermon 4.

TO HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furniſh with hinges.

2. To bend as an hinge.
Be thou a flatterer now, and hinge thy knee;
And let his very breath, whom thou'lt obſerve,
Blow off thy cap. Shakeſp. Timon of Athens

TO HINT. v. a. [enter, French. Skinner.] To bring to mind by a ſlight mention or remote alluſion; to mention imperfectly.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to ſtrike,
Juſt hint a fault, and heſitate diſlike. Pope
In waſhing whiſpers, and repeated dreams,
To hint pure thought, and warn the favour'd ſoul. Templ.

TO HINT. at. To allude to; to touch ſlightly upon.
Speaking of Auguſtus's actions, he ſtill remembers that agriculture ought to be ſome way hinted at throughout the whole poem. Addiſon on the Georgics

HINT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote alluſion; diſtant inſinuation. Let

HIR

Let him ſtrictly obſerve the firſt ſtirrings and intimations, the firſt hints and whiſpers of good and evil, that paſs in his heart. South's Sermons

2. Suggestion; intimation.
On this hint I ſpoke,
She lov'd me for the dangers I had paſt. Shakeſp. Othello Actions are ſo full of circumſtances, that, as men obſerve ſome parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them. Addiſon's Spectator

HIP. n. f. [hype, Saxon.]
1. The joint of the thigh; the fleſhy part of the thigh.
How now, which of your hips has the moſt profound ſciatica. Shakeſp. Measure for Measure Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, uſing continual riding, they were generally moleſted with the ſciatica, or hip gout. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

So ſhepherds uſe
To ſet the ſame mark on the hip
Both of their found and rotten ſheep: Hudibras, p. ii.
Againſt a ſtump his tuſk the monſter grinds,
And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound. Dryden

2. To have on the HIP. [A low phraſe.] To have an advantage over another. It ſeems to be taken from hunting, the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly ſeized by the dogs.

If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cheriſh
For his quick hunting, ſtand the putting on,
I'll have our Michael Caſſio on the hip. Shakeſp. Othello HIP. n. f. [from heope, Saxon.] The fruit of the briar or the dogroſe.

Eating hips and drinking watry foam. Hubbard's Tale
Why ſhould you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;
The oaks bear maſts, the briars ſcarlet hips. Shakeſp.
Years of ſtore of haws and hips do commonly portend cold
Winters. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory

TO HIP. v. a. [from hip.]

rups of no kindred. Shakeſp. Taming of the Shrew

2. HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

Your different taſtes divide our poets cares;
One foot the ſock, 't'other the buſkin wears;
Thus while he ſtrives to pleaſe, he's forc'd to do't,
Like Volcuſius hip-hop in a ſingle boot. Congreve

HIP. interject. An exclamation, or calling to one; the ſame as the Latin eho, heus! Ainſworth

HIP. adj. A corruption of hypochondriack. Ainſworth

HIPPOCENTAUR. n. f. [ἵππος, hippos; centaure, French.]
A fabulous monſter, half horſe and half man.

How are poetical fictions, how are *hippocentaur*s and chimeras to be imaged, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion? Dryden

HIPPOCRASS. n. f. [ἵπποκράς, French; quasi vinum Hippocratis.]
A medicated wine.

They that were full, hir'd out themſelves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceaf'd. 1 Sa. ii. 5.

HIRE. n. f. [hype, Saxon.]

1. Reward or recompence paid for the uſe of any thing.
2. Wages paid for ſervice.
Great thanks and goodly need to that good fire;
He thence departing gave for his pains hire. Fairy Queen

HIS

I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I fav'd under your father. Shakeſp.
Though little was their hire, and light their gain,
Yet ſomewhat to their ſhare he threw. Dryden

All arts and artiſts Theſeus could command,
Who ſold for hire, or wrought for better fame. Dryden
HIRELING. n. f. [from hire.]

1. One who ſerves for wages.
The hireling longs to ſee the ſhades aſcend,
That with the tedious day his toil might end,
And he his pay receive. Sandys

In the framing of Hiero's ſhip there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year, beſides many other hirelings for carriages. Wilkin's Dædalus

'Tis frequent here to ſee a freeborn ſon
On the left hand of a rich hireling run. Dryd. Juvenal

2. A mercenary; a prostitute.
Now the ſhades thy evening walk with bays,
No hireling ſhe, no prostitute to praife. Pope

HIRELING. adj. Serving for hire; venal; mercenary; doing what is done for money.

Then trumpets, torches, and a tedious crew
Of hireling mourners for his funeral due. Dryd. Perf. Sat.

ploys others paying wages.

2. In Scotland it denotes one who keeps ſmall horſes to let:
HIRSU'TE. adj. [hirsutus, Latin.] Rough; rugged.

There are bulbous, fibrous, and hirsute roots: the hirsute is a middle fort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, beſides the putting forth ſap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory

HIS. pronoun poſſeſſive. [hys, Saxon.]

1. The masculine poſſeſſive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the ſucking of a gulph. Shakeſp. Henry V.
If much you note him,
You ſhall offend him, and extend his paſſion. Shak. Macb.

Heav'n and yourſelf
Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,
And all the better is it for the maid:
Your part in her you could not keep from death;
But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life. Shak. Ro. and Jul.

If our father carry authority with ſuch diſpoſition as he bears this laſt ſurrender of his, it will but offend us. Shakeſp.
He that is nouriſh'd by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himſelf; nobody can deny but the nourishment is his. Locke

Whene'er I ſtoop, he offers at a kiſs;
And when my arms I ſtretch, he ſtretches his. Addiſ. Ovid
2. It was anciently uſed in a neutral ſenſe, where we now ſay it.

Who can impreſs the foreſt, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakeſp. Macbeth

Not the dreadful ſpout,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his deſcent. Shakeſp. Troilus and Crefſida

There's not the ſmalleſt orb, which thou behold'ſt,
But in his motion like an angel ſings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakeſp.

This rule is not ſo general, but that it admitteth his exceptions. Carew's Survey of Cornwall

Opium loſeth ſome of his poiſonous quality, if it be va-poured out, mingled with ſpirit of wine. Bacon

3. It is ſometimes uſed as a ſign of the genitive caſe: as, the man his ground, for the man's ground.

Where is this mankind now? who lives to age
Fit to be made Methuſalem his page? Denne

By thy fond comfort, by thy father's cares,
By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope's Odyssey

4. It is ſometimes uſed in oppoſition to this man's.
Were I king,
I ſhould cut off the nobles for their lands,
Deſire his jewels, and this other's houſe. Shakeſp. Macbeth

5. Anciently before ſelf.
Every of us, each for his ſelf, labour'd how to recover him. Sidney

TO HISS. v. n. [hiſſen, Dutch.] To utter a noiſe like that of a ſerpent and ſome other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noiſe which it ſignifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd glowing hot, in that ſurge, like a horſeſhoe; think of that; hiſſing hot. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor

The merchants ſhall hiſs at thee. Ezek. xxvii. 36.

See the ſnakes that they rear,
How they hiſs in their hair. Dryden's Alexander's Feaſt
Againſt the ſteed he threw
His forceful ſpear, which, hiſſing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden

HIS

To HISS v. a. [Hispan, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.

Every one will hiss him out of his disgrace. E. cluf. xxii. 1.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;

Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sandys.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. More.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off; and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous? Callier on Duding.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I

Play too; but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue

Will hiss me to my grave. Shakef. Winter's Tale.

What's the newell grief?

—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker,

Each minute seems a new one. Shakef. Macbeth.

HISS, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard

On all sides, from innumerable tongues,

A dismal universal hiss, the sound

Of public scorn! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Pierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears

Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope's Dunciad.

HIST. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: probably it may be a corruption of hush, hush it, hush it, hush it.] An exclamation commanding silence.

Hush! Romeo, hush! O for a falconer's voice,

To lure this tassel gentle back again. Shakef. Rom. and Jul.

Mute silence hiss along!

'Lest Philomel will deign a song,

In her sweetest saddest plight, Milton.

Smoothing the rugged brow of night.

Hiss, hiss, says another that stood by, away, doctor, for here's a whole pack of dials coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN, n. f. [from historia, Latin; historien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence

Equal, have I to render thee, divine

Historian! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison's Freeholder.

Not added years on years my task could close,

The long historian of my country's woes. Pope's Odyssey.

HISTORICAL, adj. [from historia, Latin.]

HISTORICK, adj. [from historia, Latin.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiogra-pher. Spenser.

Here rising bold, the patriot's honest face;

There warriors frowning in historick bras. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

In an historick relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

With equal justice and historick care,

Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY, adv. [from historical.] In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker, b. v.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we confine as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker, b. iii. f. 5.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope's Essay on Homer.

TO HISTORIFY, v. a. [from historia.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, glorify

Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney, b. i.

The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historick, and therefore may be believed. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6.

HISTORIOGRAPHY, n. f. [from historia and γραφω; historiographos, Gr.]

Fr.] An historian; a writer of history.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these knights several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiogra-

pher. Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of these persons who have been famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers?

Addison's Freeholder, No. 35.

I put the journals of all transactions into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY, n. f. [from historia and γραφω.] The art or employment of an historian.

HISTORY, n. f. [from historia, Latin; histoire, French.]

becoming a buffoon; theatrical.

HISTORIONICALLY, adv. [from historionical.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

TO HIT, v. a. [from idus, Latin, Minshew, from hitte, Danish,

to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken; and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney, b. i.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. South's Sermon.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?

Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?

If he be blind, how hitteth he so right? Sidney, b. ii.

So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. South's Sermon.

3. To attain; to reach the point.

Were I but twenty-one,

Your father's image is so hit in you,

His very air, that I should call you brother,

As I did him. Shakef. Winter's Tale.

Search every comment that your care can find,

Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind. Rowland.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns. Lake.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features. Atterbury.

4. To strike a ruling passion.

Hail, divinest melancholy!

Whose faintly visage is too bright

To hit the sense of human light. Milton.

There you hit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly; that argument never fails with him. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. To hit off: To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.

6. To hit out. To perform by good luck.

Having the sound of these ancient poets still ringing in his ears, he mought needs in singing hit out some of their tunes.

Spenser's Pastoral.

TO HIT, v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another; or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension? Lake.

The bones, teeth, and shells being sustained in the water with these metallic corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward's Natural History.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Of expectation fails, and most oft there

Where most it promises; and oft it hits

Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits. Shakef. Rom.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon's Essay.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part.

Woodward's Natural History.

Est

HIT

But thou bring'st valour too and wit, Hudibras, p. i.

Two things that seldom fail to hit.

This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible; for friars have free admittance into every house. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

All human race would fain be wits,

And millions miss for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.

You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,

Echoes the found, and jars within my soul;

There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing before that time: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon

it. Tillotson's Sermons.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon't, when the matter was so ordered that she brought her every day an egg. L'Estr.

None of them hit upon the art. Addison's Guardian.

There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

HIT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakef. Hamlet.

So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd,

And at each hit with wonder seem'd amaz'd. Dryden's Juven.

2. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shak.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Glaville.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South's Sermons.

But with more lucky hit than those

That use to make the stars depose.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estr.

These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,

And things and hits fortuitous arose,

'Then any thing might come from any thing;

For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

If at first he minds his hits,

And drinks champagne among the wits,

Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lassies. Prior.

TO HIT, v. n. [from idus, Latin, Minshew, from hitte, Danish,

to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage.

Whose offences, at some unlucky time

Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;

Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,

And the sad burden of some merry song. Pope's Horace.

TO HITCHEL, v. a. [See HATCHEL.] To beat or comb flax or

HOA

Island of bliss, all assaults
Baffling, like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea-wave. Thomson.

2. Grey with age.
It govern'd was and guided evermore
Through wisdom of a maion grave and hoar. Rai. Queen.
Now swarms the populace, a countless throng;
Youth and hoar age, and man drives man along. Pope.

3. White with frost.
HOAR-FROST. n. f. [hoar and frost.] The congelations of dew in frosty mornings on the grass.
When the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar- frost on the ground. Ex. xvi. 14.
In Fahrenheit's thermometer, at thirty-two degrees, the water in the air begins to freeze, which is known by hoar-frosts.
Arbutnot on Air.

HOARD. n. f. [hoar, Saxon.] A store laid up in secret; a hidden stock; a treasure.

I have a venturous fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shak.
They might have even starved, had it not been for this providential reserve, this hoard, that was stowed in the strata underneath, and now seasonably disclosed. Woodw. Nat. History.

TO HOARD. v. n. To make hoards; to lay up store.

He fear'd not once himself to be in need,
Nor car'd to hoard for those whom he did breed. Pa. Queen.
Happy always was it for that son,
Whose father for his hoarding went to hell? Shak. Hen. VI.

TO HOARD. v. a. To lay in hoards; to husband privily; to store secretly.

The hoarded plague of the gods requite your love? Shak.
I have just occasion to complain of them, who, because they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it. Dryd. Fab. Preface.

You hoard not health for your own private use,
But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden's Fables.

The bafe wretch, who hoards up all he can,
Is prais'd, and call'd a careful thrifty man. Dryden's Juven.

You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money; but you may safely relate that he hoards it. Arbutnot's Art of political Lying.

A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is hoarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years. Rogers, Sermon 2.

HOARDER. n. f. [hoard.] One that stores up in secret.

Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be an advantage to nobody but hoarders of money. Locke.

HOARHOUND. n. f. [marrubium, Latin.] A plant.

It is a verticillate plant with a lip flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is upright, with two horns; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts: the pointal is fixed to the hinder part of the flower, and attended by four embryoes, which become so many oblong seeds, inclosed in the flower-cup. Miller.

Hoarhound has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthma, and in all diseases of the breast and lungs, of which a thick and viscous matter is the cause; but it is now little used. Hill's Mat. Med.

HOARINESS. n. f. [hoary.] The state of being whitish;
the colour of old men's hair.

He grows a wolf, his hoariness remains,
And the same rage in other members reigns. Dryden.

HOARSE. adj. [har, Saxon; heersch, Dutch.] Having the voice rough, as with a cold; having a rough found.

Come, sit, sit, and a song.
—Clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or faying we are hoarse. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That cokes the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He sped his steps along the hoarse resounding shore. Dry.
The stock-dove only through the forest cooes, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson's Summer.

HOARSELY. adv. [hoarse.] With a rough harsh voice.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

HOARSENESS. n. f. [hoarse.] Roughness of voice.

The voice is sometimes intercluded by an hoarseness, or viscous phlegm.

She sings them back in my despite!
I had a voice in heav'n, ere sulph'rous steams
Had damp'd it to a hoarseness. Dryden's King Arthur.

The want of it in the wind-pipe occasions hoarseness in the gullet, and difficulty of swallowing. Arbutnot on Aliments.

HOARY. adj. [har, Saxon.] See HOAR.
1. White; whitish.

Thus she rested on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind. Addison.

HOB

2. White or grey with age.
A conely palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary grey. Shak.

Solyman, marvelling at the courage and majesty of the hoary old prince in his so great extremity, dismissed him, and sent him again into the city. Kneller's History of the Turk.

Has then my hoary head deserv'd no better?
Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great preacher, to thy promis'd bliss. Prior.

3. White with frost.
Through this distemperature we see
The seasons alter; hoary headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose. Shakespeare.

4. Mouldy; mossy; rusty.
There was brought out of the city into the camp very coarse, hoary, moulded bread. Kneller's History of the Turk.

HO'SNOB. This is probably corrupted from hob nob by a coarse pronunciation. See HAB NAB.

His incensement at this moment is so implacable, that fastifaction can be none, but pangs of death and sepulchre: hob- nob is his word; give't, or take't. Shakel. Twelfth Night.

TO HOBBLE. v. n. [to hob, to hobble, to hobble.]
1. To walk lamely or awkwardly upon one leg more than the other; to hitch.

The friar was hobbling the same way too, accidentally again.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Some persons continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through. Addison's Spectator.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, without being discovered by his hobbling. Swift.

2. To move roughly or unevenly. Feet being ascribed to veries, whatever is done with feet is likewise ascribed to them.

Those ancient Romans had a sort of extempore poetry, or untunable hobbling verse. Dryden.

While you Pindarick truths rehearse,
She hobbles in alternate verse. Prior.

HOBBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Uneven awkward gait.
One of his heels is higher than the other, which gives him a hobble in his gait. Gulliver's Travels.

HOBBLER. n. f. [from hobble.]
For twenty hobblers armed, the Irishmen were so called, because they served on hobbies, he paid six-pence a-piece per diem. Davies on Ireland.

HOBBLINGLY. adv. [from hobble.] Clumsily; awkwardly;
with a halting gait.

HOBBY. n. f. [hobereus, French.]
1. A species of hawk.

They have such a hovering possession of the Valtoline, as an hobby hath over a lark. Bacon.

The common people will chop like trouts at an artificial fly, and dare like larks under the awe of a painted hobby.
L'Estrange's Fables.

Larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryden.

2. [Hoppe, Gothic, a horse; hobin, French, a pacing horse.]
An Irish or Scottish horse; a pacing horse; a garra.

3. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.
Those grave contenders about opinative trifles look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby horse. Glanv. Serp. c. 27.

As young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer;
But leap pro libitu, and scout
On horse call'd hobby, or without. Prior.

4. A stupid fellow.
No hobby horse, with gorgeous top,
Could with this rod of sid compare. Swift.

I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby horses must not hear. Shakespeare.

HOBGoblin. n. f. [according to Skinner, for hobgoblin, from Robin Goodfellow, Hob being the nickname of Robin; but more probably, according to Wallis and Junius, hobgoblin en- pusse, because they do not move their feet: whence, says Na- lis, came the boys play of fox in the hole, the fox always hopping on one leg.

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality:
Crier hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes. Shakespeare.

HOBBIT. n. f. A small mortar to shoot little bombs.

HOBBY. n. f. [from hobby and nail.] A nail used in shoing a hobby or little horse; a nail with a thick strong head.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burlybon'd clown in chimes of beef, ere thou sleep in thy sweat, I beseech Jove on my knees thou may'st be turn'd into hob- nails. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

We shall buy maidens as they buy hobnails, by the hundred. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

HOBBNAILED. adj. [from hobnail.] Set with hobnails.

Wouldst thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,
Wouldst thou, to run the gaudier, these eyegs
To a whole company of hobnail'd flues? Dryden's Juven.

HOCK. n. f. [The same with hough; hoh, Saxon.] The joint between the knee and the fetlock.

TO HOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To disable in the hock.

HOCK. n. f. [from Hockheim on the Maine.] Old

- Ye Latian dames, if any here
Hold your unhappy queen Amata dear!
The orgies and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden's Æn.
5. To have any station.
The star bids the shepherd fold;
Now the top of heav'n doth hold. Milton.
And now the strand, and now the plain they held;
Their ardent eyes with bloody streaks were fill'd. Dryden.
Observe the youth who first appears in fight,
And holds the nearest station to the light. Dryden's Æn.
How pleasant and joyful a thing is it to have a light held us forth from heaven to guide our steps. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
6. To possess; to enjoy.
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The castle, helden by a garrison of Germans, he commanded to be besieged. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Assuredly it is more shame for a man to lose that which he holds, than to fail in getting that which he never had. Hayw.
7. To possess in subordination.
The duke was willing to yield himself unto Solyman as his vassal, and of him to hold his feignory for a yearly tribute. Knolles's History of the Turks.
8. To suspend; to refrain.
Death! what do'st? O hold thy blow!
What thou do'st, thou do'st not know. Craheav.
9. To stop; to refrain.
We cannot hold mortality's strong hand. Shak. K. John.
Fell, banning hag! inchantress, hold thy tongue. Shakespeare.
Men in the midst of their own blood, and so furiously afflicted, held their hands, contrary to the laws of nature and necessity. Bacon's War with Spain.
When straight the people, by no force compell'd,
Nor longer from their inclination held,
Break forth at once. Waller.
Unless thou find occasion, hold thy tongue;
Thyself or others, careless talk may wrong. Denham.
Hold your laughter, and then divert your fellow-servants.
Swift's Directions to the Footman.
10. To fix to any condition.
His gracious promise you might,
As cause had call'd you up, have held him to. Shak. Coriol.
11. To preserve; to keep.
Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
That it will quickly drop: my day is dim. Shak. Hen. IV.
12. To confine to a certain state.
The most High then shewed signs for them, and held still the flood, 'till they were pass'd over. 2 Esdr. xiii. 14.
13. To detain.
Him God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. Acts.
14. To retain; to continue.
These reasons mov'd her star-like husband's heart;
But still he held his purpose to depart. Dryden.

is hard. Hooker, b. ii. c. 1.
This holdeth not in the sea-coasts, because the vapour of the sea, without showers, doth refresh. Bacon's Natural History.
The lasting of plants is most in those that are largest of body; as oak, elm, and chestnut, and this holdeth in trees;
but in herbs it is often contrary. Bacon's Natural History.
When the religion formerly received is rent by discord, and when the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, and full of scandal, and withal the times be stupid, ignorant, and barbarous, you may doubt the springing up of a new sect;
if then also there should arise any extravagant and strange spirit, to make himself author thereof; all which points hold when Mahomet published his law. Bacon, Essay 59.
Nothing can be of greater use and defence to the mind than the discovering of these colours, shewing in what cases they hold, and in what they deceive.
Where outward force constrains, the sentence hold;
But who constrains me?
So doth he deal with the testimonies of the fathers, but them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations;
they hold only of such a sort of prayer.

These are interests important enough, and yet we must be wheed to consider them; nay, that does not prevail neither, but with a perverse coyness we hold off. Decay of Piety.
13. To hold on. To continue; not to be interrupted.
The trade held on for many years after the bishops became Protestants; and some of their names are still remembered with infamy, on account of enriching their families by such facileious alienations. Swift.
14. To hold on. To proceed.
He held on, however, 'till he was upon the very point of breaking. L'Estrange.
15. To hold out. To last; to endure.
Before those dews that form manna come upon trees in the valleys, they dissipate, and cannot hold out. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
As there are mountebanks for the natural body, so are there mountebanks for the politick body; men that perhaps have been lucky in two or three experiments, but want the grounds of science, and therefore cannot hold out. Bacon's Essays.
Truth, fidelity, and justice, are a sure way of thriving, and will hold out, when all fraudulent arts and devices will fail. Tillotson's Sermons.

I ask, how shall any one distinguish the inspirations of the Holy-ghost? Lodge.- HOLY-THURSDAY. n. f. The day on which the ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, ten days before Whit Sunday.- HOLY-WEEK. n. f. The week before Easter.- HOLYDAY. n. f. [holy and day.]
1. The day of some ecclesiastical festival.
2. Anniversary feast.
This victory was so welcome unto the Persians, that in memorial thereof they kept that day as one of their solemn holydays for many years after. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Rome's holydays, you tell, as if a guest
With the old Romans you were wont to feast. Waller.- 3. A day of gayety and joy.
He writes verses, he speaks holyday, he smells April and May; he will carry it. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
What, have I escap'd love-letters in the holyday time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Shakespeare.- 4. A time that comes seldom.
Courage is but a holyday kind of virtue, to be seldom exercised. Dryden's Fables, Delia.- HOMAGE. n. f. [homage, French; homagium, low Latin.]
1. Service paid and fealty professed to a sovereign or superior lord.
Call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.
The chiefs, in a solemn manner, did their homages, and made their oaths of fealty to the earl marshal. Davis.- 2. Obedience; respect paid by external action.
The gods great mother, when her heavenly race
Do homage to her. Denham.
A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay
They saw, and thitherward they bent their way;
To this both knights and dames their homage made,
And due obedience to the daisy paid. Dryden.
Go, go, with homage you proud victors meet!
Go, lie like dogs beneath your masters' feet. Dryden.- To HOMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To reverence by external action; to pay honour to; to profess fealty.- HOMAGER. n. f. [homager, Fr. from homage.] One who holds by homage of some superior lord.
As I'm Egypt's queen,
Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Caesar's homager. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
His subjects, traitors, are received by the duke of Bretagne his homager. Bacon's Henry VII.- HOME. n. f. [ham, Saxon.]
1. His own house; the private dwelling.
I'm now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment. Shakespeare.
Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife. Dryden.
When Hector went to see
His virtuous wife, the fair Andromache,
He found her not at home; for she was gone. Dryden.
Those who have homes, when home they do repair,
To a last lodging call their wand'ring friends. Dryden.- 2. His own country.
How can tyrants safely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance? Shakespeare's H. VI.
Their determination is to return to their homes, and to trouble you no more. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

HOM

- With honour to his home let Thebes ride,
With love to friend. Dryden's Fables.
At home the hateful names of parties cease,
And factious souls are weary'd into peace. Dryden.
They who pass through a foreign country, towards their native home, do not usually give up themselves to the pleasures of the place. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. The place of constant residence.
Flandria, by plenty made the home of war,
Shall weep her crime, and bow to Charles restor'd. Prior.
United to a substance, it signifies domestic.
Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign. Bacon's Advice to Pilgrims.
HOME. adv. [from the noun.]
1. To one's own habitation.
One of Adam's children in the mountains lights on a glittering substance; home he carries it to Adam, who finds it to be hard, to have a bright yellow colour, and exceeding great weight. Locke.
2. To one's own country.
Close to one's own breast or affairs.
He that encourages treason lays the foundation of a doctrine, that will come home to himself. L'Estrange.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- A loyal fir
To him thou follow'it: I will pay thy graces
Home both in word and deed. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Her cause and yours
I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you
Before the duke, and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home and home. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Men of age object too much, adventure too little, and seldom drive business home to the full period; but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.
That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection clearly. Sanderson.
- Break through the thick array
Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him. Addis.
He makes choice of some piece of morality; and in order to press this home, he makes less use of the force of reasoning.
Pope's View of Epick Poems.
- I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point. Atterbury's Sermon, Preface.
5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy.
Poison may be false;
The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure. Dryden.
I am sorry to give him such home thrusts; for he lays himself so open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.
- HOMEBORN*. adj. [from home and born.]
1. Native; natural.
Though to be thus elemented, am
These creatures from homeborn intrinsic harm. Daune.

Only to me two homebred youths belong. Dryden's Juven.
3. Domestic; not foreign.
But if of danger, which hereby doth dwell,
And homebred evil, ye desire to hear,
I can you tidings tell. Fairy Queen, cant. i.
- This once happy land,
By homebred fury rent, long groan'd. Phillips.
- HOMEFELT*. adj. [from home and felt.] Inward; private.
Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard till now. Milton.
- Happy next him who to these shades retires,
Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,
Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease. Pope.
- HOMELY*. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly.
HOMELINESS. n. f. [from homely.] Plainness; rudeness; coarseness.

HOM

- Homer has opened a great field of railery to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments. Addison's Spectator.
- HOMELY*. adj. [from home.] Plain; homely; not elegant;
not beautiful; not fine; coarse; rude.
Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness. Sidney.
- Within this wood, out of a rock did rise
A spring of water, mildly tumbling down;
Whereto approached not in any wise
The homely shepherd, nor the ruder clown. Spenser.
- Like rich hangings in an homey house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift:
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift. Shakespeare.
Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Shakespeare.
Our stomachs will make what's homely favoury. Shakespeare.
It is for homely features to keep home;
They had their name thence. Milton.
It is observed by some, that there is none so homely but loves a looking-glass. Saunders's Sermon.
- Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band
Invade their trenchers next. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.
Now Stephen daily entertains
His Chloe in the homely strains. Swift.
- Homely* persons, the more they endeavour to adorn themselves, the more they expose the defects they want to hide. Clar.
- HOMELY*. adv. Plainly; coarsely; rudely.
Thus like the god his father, homely dress,
He strides into the hall a horrid guest. Dryden's Æn.
- HOMELYN*. n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.
HOMEMADE. adj. [from home and made.] Made at home; not manufactured in foreign parts.
A tax laid on your native product, and homemade commodities, makes them yield less to the first seller. Laet.
- HOMER*. n. f. A measure of about three pints.
An homer of barley-seed shall be valued at fifty shillings of silver. Levi. xxvii. 18.

He appeared in a suit of English broad-cloth, very plain, but rich: every thing he wore was substantial, honest, home- spun ware. Addis.
3. Plain; coarse; rude; homely; inelegant.
They sometimes put on, when they go ashore, long sleeveless coats of homespun cotton. Sandys's Travels.
- We say, in our homespun English proverb, He killed two birds with one stone; pleased the emperor, by giving him the resemblance of his ancestors, and gave him such a resemblance as was not scandalous in that age. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.
- Our homespun authors must forsake the field,
And Shakespeare to the lost Scarlatti yield. Addis.
- HOMESPU*. n. f. A coarse, inelegant, rude, untaught, rullick man.
What hempen homespuns have we swaggering here,
So near the cradle of the fairy queen? Shakespeare.
- HOMESTALL*. n. f. [from home and stall, Saxon.] The place of HOMESTEAD. n. f. the house.
Both house and homestead into seas are born,
And rocks are from their old foundations torn. Dryden.
- HOMEWARD*. adv. [from home and ward, Saxon.] Towards HOMEWARDS. adv. home; towards the native place; towards the place of residence.
Then Urania homeward did arise,
Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.
- My affairs
Do even drag me homeward. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
- Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Dante.
- Look homeward, angel now, and melt with ruth;
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth!
Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures born,
They sing, and Alia takes their notes return. Dryden's Æn.
- What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And, wand'ring homeward, seek our safety hence. Dryden.
- HOMICIDE*. n. f. [from homicide, French; homicidium, Latin.]
1. Murder; manslaughter.
The apostles command to abstain from blood: construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker, b. iv.
2. Destruction.

HON

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.
What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.
3. [from homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A murderer; a manlayer.
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.
—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakespeare.
Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strew the field. Dryden.
- HOMICIDAL*. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.
The troop forth issuing from the dark recess,
With homicidal rage, the king oppress. Pope's Odyssey.
- HOMILETICAL*. adj. [from homiletic.] Social; conversible.
His life was holy, and, when he had leisure for retirements, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy fullen ones of the cloyster. Atterbury.
- HOMILY*. n. f. [from homilies, French; homilies, Latin.] A discourse read to a congregation.
Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times;
a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker.
- What tedious homily of love have you wearied your pa-tristioners withal, and never cited have patience, good people.
Shakespeare's As you like it.
- If we survey the homilies of the ancient church, we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- HOMOLOGICAL*. adj. [from homologos, Fr. homologues.] Having HOMOGENEOUS. n. f. the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.
The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogenous parts. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
- Ice is a similitude body, and homogeneous concretion, whose material is properly water. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from alum, and so of the rest. Woodward's Natural History.
- The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton's Opt.
- HOMOGENEALNESS*. n. f. [from homogeneous, or homogeneous.]
HOMOGENEITY. n. f. Participation of the same principles or HOMOGENEOUSNESS. n. f. nature; similitude of kind.
The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- Upon this supposition of only different diameters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the se-cedent liquors. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
- HOMOGENY*. n. f. [from homogenia.] Joint nature.
By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeny. Bacon.
- HOMOLOGOUS*. adj. [from homologos, Fr. homologues.] Having the same manner or proportions.
HOMONYMOUS. adj. [from homonymos, Fr. homonymes.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous.
As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous; and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation. Wat's Logic.
- HOMONYMY*. n. f. [from homonymie, French; homonymie.] Equiva-cation; ambiguity.
HOMOTONOUS. adj. [from homotonus.] Equable; said of such distempers as keep a constant tenour of rise, state, and declension. Quincy.
- HONE*. n. f. [This word M. Casaubon derives from axon; Juni- nus from hogsaen, Welsh; Skinner, who is always rational, from pen, Saxon, a stone; penan, to stone.] A whetstone for a razor.
A hone and a parer, to pare away grace. Tusser's Husband.
- To HONE. v. n. [from hongan, Saxon.] To pine; to long for any thing.
HONEST. adj. [from honeste, French; honestus, Latin.]
1. Upright; true; sincere.
What art thou?
—A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. Sh.
The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things. Wat's Logic.
2. Chaste.
Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. Shakespeare.
3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.
It is sometimes used criminally for dishonesty; base.
I'll devise some honest flanders
To stain my cousin with: one doth not know How much an ill word doth impute on liking. Shakespeare.
- HONESTLY*. adv. [from honest.]
1. Uprightly; justly.
It doth make me tremble,
4

HON

- There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honestly, would rather perish basely. Ben. Jonson's Caut.
For some time past all endeavours or proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.
2. With chastity; modestly.
HONESTY. n. f. [from honesteté, French; honestas, Latin.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.
Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.
—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower. Shakespeare.
- Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.
- HONESTY*. adv. [from honest.]
1. Covered with honesty.
The bee with honest thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing. Milton.
2. Sweet; luscious.
When he speaks,
The air, a charmed lib'rtine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honest sentences. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honest words, a rougher tongue Draws hitherward. Milton's Agonistes.
- HONEY*. n. f. [from honey, Saxon; honey, Dutch; honey, honey, German.]
1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming viscous on fermentation, inflammable, liquefiable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. We have three kinds of honey:
the first and sweetest is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell; it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining from the combs without pressing. The second is thicker than the first, often almost solid, procured from the combs by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs over the fire, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, swallows it, flies away with it to the hive, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into some of the cells of the comb. The honey thus taken up into the body of the bee, and deposited again into the cells of the comb, is destined for the use of the young offspring; but in hard seasons the bees are sometimes reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves, and die of hunger after they have eat it all up. Honey, taken out of the new combs early in the Summer, is vastly preferable to that taken from the same hive in Autumn. Honey is an excellent pectoral, is detergent, aperient, and diuretic. Will's Mat. Med.
- So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakespeare's Hen. V.
- The like contention is found among the Greeks, touching his education and first fostering: some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Rail's History of the World.
- In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon's Natural History.
- When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot. L'Estrange.
- Honey* is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sopo, resolvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbutnot.
- New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Sweetness; lusciousness.
The king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
- A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.
3. A name of tenderness; sweet; sweetness. [Mel; coram. un.]
Honey, you shall be well deserv'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion, and I dote
In mine own comfort. Shakespeare's Othello.
- Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee, didst not thou say, thou long'd'st for a Christian slave? Dryden.
- To HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.
Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an insensuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honey and making love
Over the nasty sty. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- HONEY-BAG*.
o

HON

HONEY-BAG. n. f. [honey and bag.] The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against Winter. Grew's Museum.

HONEY-COMB. n. f. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HONEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun, which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Walsman.

HONEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer's Husbandry.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HONEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub: the leaves are like those of burnet; the cup of the flower is divided into several parts: the flower consists of four leaves, and is of an anomalous figure, sometimes in the shape of a fan, and at other times conical: the ovary becomes a fruit, resembling a bladder four cornered, divided into four cells, and pregnant with roundish seeds. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HONEY-GNAT. n. f. [melio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect.

HONEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.] The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey-moon is over. Addis.

HONEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Latin.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakespeare.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then mello beat, and honey-suckles pound;
With these alluring favours strew the ground. Dryd. Virgil.

HONEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

HONEY-WORT. n. f. [cerinthia, Latin.] A plant.

It hath glaucous deep green leaves, which are, for the most part, beset with prickles: the flowers are cylindrical, consisting of one leaf, in shape like those of comfrey, and are pendulous: each flower turns to the top of the second page of the third leaf following. Miller.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison on Italy.

This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with these little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addis. Guard.

HONOUR. n. f. [honor, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity, high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon's Essays.

3. The title of a man of rank.

Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the separated councils:
His honour and myself are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Cateby. Shakef. R. III.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours,
Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shakespeare.

HON

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shak.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from confidence, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Reverence; due veneration.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

There, my lord,
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst purfuivants.
—Ha! 'tis he, indeed!
Is this the honour they do one another? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers's Sermons.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour flav'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not prevent itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

8. Dignity of mind.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton's Paradise Lost.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burton's Theory of the Earth.

10. Public mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden's A. n. b. vi.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an inconceivable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wake's Preparation for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope's Horat.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The fire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shakespeare.

TO HONOUR. v. a. [honorare, French; honore, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Esch. xvi. 11.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Ecclus. x. 30.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? Ecclus. x. 31.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

In footling them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shakespeare.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, and the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Ex. xiv.

HONOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth? Jf. xxiii. 8.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

I think it thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Conferring honour.

Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryden's En.

HOO

Many of those persons, who put this honourable talk on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Fa. Qu.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here's a Bohemian tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shak.

6. Without taint; without reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Jospe for an haven. Mac. xiv. 5.

Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shakespeare's Henry V.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it. Hayward.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, fend me word to-morrow. Shakespeare.

8. Equitable.

HONOURABLENESS. n. f. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity.

HONOURABLY. adv. [from honourable.]

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:
Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryden's Juvenal.

HONOURER. n. f. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not here omit to do justice to Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

HOOD. in composition, is derived from the Saxon hob, in German heit, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition; as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is used after the Dutch, as maidenhood. Sometimes it is taken collectively; as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

HOOD. n. f. [hob, Saxon, probably from hobos, head.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd;
Their hoods and sleeves the fame. Dryden's Fables.

2. Anything drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

Undertaking so to gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was to ride in cold weather, that none should discern him. Watson.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated or joined to it. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

TO HOOD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, amen. Shakespeare.

3. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmament waters dipt above;
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.

HOODMAN'S BLIND. n. f. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was't,
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shak. Hamlet.

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hood-wink themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the league of the adversaries. Shakespeare.

You may
Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hood-wink. Shakespeare.

Then the who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,
Doth first herself within death's mirror see.
So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one lost,
And, hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a post. Ben. Johnson.

HOO

Satan is fain to hood-wink those that are apt to start. Decay of Piety.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks mens minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?
Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance! Renve.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort,
The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Garth.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient; for the prize, I'll bring thee to,
Shall hood-wink this mischance. Shakespeare's Tempest.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all mens ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hood-winked with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him. Sidney.

HOOF. n. f. [hob, Saxon; hoof, Dutch.] The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets. Ezek. xxvi. 11.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs. More's Ant. date against Atheism.

HOOFED. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest. Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. ii. c. 8.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the forefoot, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farrier's Dict.

HOOK. n. f. [hooce, Saxon; hoeck, Dutch.]

1. Anything bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot hooks.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have pulled it down. Knolles.

2. The curved wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hook,
That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spenser.

My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,
They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught. Denham.

HOPE. n. f. [hopa, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]
1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.
There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again.
Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him.
When in heav'n she shall his essence see,
This is her sovereign good, and perfect bliss;
Her longing, wishing, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this.
Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair taltall! by thee
We are not where or what we be;
But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now. Cromwell's Preface.

HOP

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. Taylor.
He thought them both, but wish'd his hap might find Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope.
Of what so seldom chanc'd: when to his wish,
Beyond his hopes, Eve separate he spies. Milton's Parad. Lost.
The Trojan dames
To Pallas' face in long procession go,
In hopes to reconcile their heav'nly foe. Dryden's Virg. Æn.

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.
The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes: sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.
Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliment.
Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grift ground,
And mark the clack how justly it will found. Batterton.
2. A basket for carrying feed. Ainsworth.
HORAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.
However reduc'd and plain,
The watch would fill a watch remain;
But if the hora orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Frier.
HORARY. adj. [horarius, French; horarius, Latin.]
1. Relating to an hour.
I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befell you,
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our worst erection. Andriani, p. ii.
In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has largely discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers. Tatler, No. 56.
2. Continuing for an hour.
When, from a basket of Summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquility was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of Summer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HORDE. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people.
Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thomson's Winter.
HORIZON. n. f. [horizon, French; horizon, Latin.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakespeare horizon.
When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakef.
She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon's Henry VII.
Far in th' horizon to the North appear'd,
From skirt to skirt, a fiery region. Milton's Paradise Lost.
In his East the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round
Invested with bright rays. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
The

HOR

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous sight. Dryden.
When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horour that rises from such a prospect. Addison's Spectator.
HORIZON'TAL. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]
1. Near the horizon.
As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.
An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus. Brown.
The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins.
HORIZON'TALLY. adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.
As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley's Sermons.
HORN. n. f. [horn, Gothick; horn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]
1. The hard pointed bodies which grow on the heads of some gaminivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.
No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon's N. Hist.
Zelus rises through the ground,
Pendant the bull's tough neck with pain,
That toiles back his horns in vain. Addison on Italy.
All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley's Sermons.
2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.
The squire 'gan n gher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.
There's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
The goddess to her crooked horn
Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,
And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound. Dryden.
Fair Alcianus, and his youthful train,
With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden.
3. The extremity of the waxing or waning moon, as mentioned by poets.
She blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden.
The moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thomson.
4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.
Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakespeare.
Audiens,
Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world,
Which were in hell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
5. A drinking cup made of horn.
6. Antler of a cuckold.
If I have horns to make one mad,
Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. Shakespeare.
Merchants, vent'ring through the main,
Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras, p. ii.
7. Horn mad. Perhaps mad as a cuckold.
I am glad he went not in himself: if he had, he would have been horn mad. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
HORNBEAK. n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.
HORNFINCH. n. f. A kind of fish.
HORNBEAM. n. f. [horn and beam, Dutch, for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]
It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree: the katkins are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree, and the outward shell of the fruit is winged. This tree was formerly much used in hedges for wildness and orangeries.
The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Nitler.
HORNBOOK. n. f. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.
He teaches boys the hornbook. Shak. Love's Labour's Lost.
Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer. Locke.
To master John the English maid
A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;
And that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

HOR

HO'RNED. adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.
As when two rams, stir'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that, with the terror of the shock, Astonish'd both stand senseless as a block. Fairy Queen, b. i.
O, that I were
Upon the hill of Bafan, to out-roar
The horned herd. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead. Denham.
I thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn
Suffices fatnels to the fruitful corn. Dryden.
HO'RNED. n. f. [from horn.] One that works in horn, and sells horns.
The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns. Grew.
HO'RNED. n. f. [horn, Saxon, from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.
Silence, in times of fuff'ring, is the best;
'Tis dangerous to disturb a horned's nest. Dr. der.
Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Merrim.
I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham's Physico-Theology.
HO'RNFOOT. n. f. [horn and foot.] Hoofel.
Mad frantick man,
That did not only quake!
With hornfoot horses, and brags wheels,
Jove's storms to emulate. Hakewill on Providence.
HO'RNOWL. n. f. A kind of horned owl. Ainsworth.
HO'RNPIPE. n. f. [horn and pipe.] A county dance, danced commonly to a horn.
A lusty tablere,
That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,
Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid. Spenser.
There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis. Kaigh.
Let all the quicksilver i' the mine
Run t' the feet-veins, and refine
Your firkhum jerkum to a dance
Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,
To wonder at the hornpipe's here
Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Pen. Tolsen.
Florida danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler, N^o. 100.

2. Resembling horn.
He thought he by the brook of Cherith stood,
And saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing even and morn. Milton's Pa. Lgh.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but rises up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolic figure. Reg.
Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet. Dryd. Virg.
The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance. Addison's Spectator.
As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrid, it will no longer concrete. Arbutnot on Aliments.
3. Hard as horn; callous.
Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.

account of the hours.
HO'ROLOGE. n. f. [horologium, Latin.] Any instrument that HO'ROLOGY. } tells the hour: as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.
'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep;
He'll watch the horologe a double fet,
He'll drink rock not his cradle. Shakespeare's Othello.
Before the days of Jerome there were horologies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsamnia. Brown.
HO'ROMETRY. n. f. [horometrie, French; hora and μετρία.] The art of measuring hours.
It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HO'ROSCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French; hora and σκοπε.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.
How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Dramm.
A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living natures. Bis.
Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
His fire, the bear-ey'd Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryd. Juv. m.

HOR

The Greek names this the horoscope;
This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Greesh's Manil.
They understood the planets and the zodiack by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. Bentley's Sermons.
HORRIBLE. adj. [horrible, French; horribilis, Lat.] Dreadful; terrible; shocking; hideous; enormous.
No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be fights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon's Natural History.
Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuation that the soul is immortal, are, of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South's Sermons.

1. Terreur mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.
Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
Did always sit, beating his iron wings;
And after him owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy things. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
I have sapt full with horrors;
Direful, familiar to my laught'rous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
Therelore of death we think with quiet mind;
But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
A trembling horror in our souls we find.
Me damp horror chill'd
At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold.
Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
Their pride is humbled, and their fear confess'd. Dryden.
2. Gloom; dreaminess.
Her gloomy preference fiddens all the scene,
Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.
3. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shinking. Quincy.
All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Natural History.
HORSE. n. f. [hors, Saxon.]
1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.
Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

HORSECHESNUT. n. f. [horse and chesnut.] A plant.
It hath digitated or fingered leaves: the flowers, which consist of five leaves, are of an anomalous figure, opening with two lips: there are male and female upon the same spike:
the female flowers are succeeded by nuts, which grow in green prickly husks. Their whole year's shoot is commonly performed in three weeks time, after which it does no more than increase in bulk, and become more firm; and all the latter part of the summer is occupied in forming and strengthening the buds for the next year's shoots. Miller.
I may bring in the horsechesnut, which grows into a goodly standard. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HORSECOURSER. n. f. [horse and course.] Junius derives it from horse and course, an old Scotch word, which signifies to change; and it should therefore, he thinks, be writ horsecofer.
The word now used in Scotland is horsecouper, to denote a jockey, feller, or rather changer of horses. It may well be derived from course, as he that sells horses may be supposed to course or exercise them.]

That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
HOTNESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.
HOTCHPOTCH. n. f. [haché en potée, French; or hachée en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled haph;
a mixture.
Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language. Camden's Remains.
A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture of hotchpotch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Bacon's Natural History.
Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcasses would remain;
But a mass'd heap, a hotchpotch of the slain. Dryd. Juvenal.
HOTSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]
1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate and heady.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;

HOVEL. n. f. [Diminutive of hope, house, Saxon.]
1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.
So likewise a hovel will serve for a room,
To stacke on the pease, when harvest shall come. Tusser.
If you make a large hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre.
Bacon's Natural History.
Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd,
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd. Dryden.
2. A mean habitation; a cottage.
The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them, and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such forry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the Summer. Ray on the Creation.
To HOVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in an hovel.
And was't thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Shaksp. King Lear.

HOU

HOVEN. part. pass. [from heave.] Raised; swelled; tumefied.

other.
Some fiery devil hovens in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Shak. King John.
Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation. Shak. Richard III.
A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden's Æn.
Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and fetting upon it. Addison's Spectator.
Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies. Prior.
Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night. Pope.

A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves. Fairfax.
HOUND. n. f. [hund, Saxon; hund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.
Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,
Are cleped all by the name of dogs. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Jason threw, but fail'd to wound
The boar, and slew an undeserving hound,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryd.
The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Likely that fox in shape and species found,
Pursues the noted path and covets home. Prior.
To HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To set on the chase.
God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Brancham.
2. To hunt; to pursue.
If the wolves had been hounded by tygers, they should have worried them. L'Estrange.
HO'UNDFISH. n. f. A kind of fish.
HO'UNDS'NOUSE. n. f. [synagoga, Latin.] A plant.
The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, deeply cut into five parts: the flower consists of one leaf, which arises from the bottom of the flower, changes into a fruit composed of four rough, each for the most part burry cells, and containing a flat seed affixed to a pyramidal and quadrilateral placenta. The proper season to take the roots up is soon after the leaves decay. Miller.
HO'UNTREE. n. f. A kind of tree. Anstworth.
HOUP. n. f. [upupa, Latin.] The puet. Anstworth.
HOURE. n. f. [heure, French; hora, Latin.]
1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.
See the minutes how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shaksp. H. VI.
2. A particular time. Vexation.

HOU

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shaksp.
When we can intreat an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shaksp. Macbeth.
The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden's Æn.
3. The time as marked by the clock.
The hour runs through the roughest day. Shaksp.
Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man, who kept good hours. Tatler, N^o. 88.
They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight. Addison's Guardian.
HOURLASS. n. f. [hour and lass.]
1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.
Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hour- glass than by the day's clearness. Sidney.
If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.
O, recollect your thoughts!
Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty hand
Is ebbing to the last. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.
We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon.
HOURLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour;
frequent; often repeated.
Alcyone
Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waning moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden.
We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.
HOURLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.
She deserves a lord,
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shak. All's well that ends well.
Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shaksp. Hamlet.
They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou saw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.
HURLATE. n. f. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours pointed by the hand of a clock are inscribed.
If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness.
Locke.
HOUSE. n. f. [pur, Saxon; hous, Dutch; hust, Scottish.]
1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.
Sparrows must not build in his house eaves. Shaksp.
Houses are built to live in, not to look on; therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon, Essay 46.
In a house the doors are moveable, and the rooms square;
yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Watts.
2. Any place of abode.
The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shaksp.
3. Place in which religious or studious persons live in common;

upon madam. Swift.
5. Station of a planet in the heavens, astrologically considered.
Pure spiritual substances we cannot converse with, therefore have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillingfleet.
6. Family of ancestors, descendants, and kindred; race.
The red robe and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses. Shaksp. Henry VI.
An ignominious ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy sure
Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shak. Measure for Measure.
By delaying my last line, upon your grace's accession to the patrimonies of your house, I may seem to have made a fortitude. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.
A poet is not born in every race;
Two of a house few ages can afford,
One to perform, another to record. Dryden's Fables.

HO'U

7. A body of the parliament; the lords or commons collectively considered.
Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both house, especially that of the lords. King Charles.
To HOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To harbour; to admit to residence.
Palladius wish'd him to house all the Helots, and make themselves masters of the gates. Sidney.

dog. Addison's Spectator.
HOUSEHOLD. n. f. [house and hold.]
1. A family living together.
Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean. Shaksp.
A little kingdom is a great household, and a great house a little kingdom. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Of God observ'd
The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. xi.
He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith; in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Spratt's Sermons.
Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,
And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all. Dryden's Fables.
Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.
In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And talks, without affecting airs,
His household twice a day to prayers. Swift.
2. Family life; domestic management.
An inventory, thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household. Shaksp. H. VIII.
3. It is used in the manner of an adjective, to signify domestic;
belonging to the family.
Cornelius call'd two of his household servants. As x. 7.

HOU

For nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to study household good;
And good works in her husband to promote. Milt. Par. Lost.
It would be endless to enumerate the oaths and blasphemies among the men, among the women the neglect of household affairs. Swift.
H/USEHOLDER. n. f. [from household.] Master of a family.
A certain householder planted a vineyard. Mat. xxi. 33.
H/USEHOLDSTUFF. n. f. [from household and stuff.] Furniture of an house; utensils convenient for a family.
In this war that he maketh, he still flieth from his foe, and lurketh in the thick woods, waiting for advantages: his cloak is his bed, yea and his householdstuff. Spenser on Ireland.
A great part of the building was consumed, with much costly householdstuff. Bacon's Henry VII.
The poor woman had her jest for her householdstuff, and paid her physician with a conceit for his money. L'Estrange.
H/USEKEEPER. n. f. [from house and keep.]
1. Householder; master of a family.
To be said an honest man a id a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as to say a graceful man and a great scholar. Shakespeare.
If I may credit housekeepers and substantial tradesmen, all sorts of provisions and commodities are risen exceedingly. Lake.
2. One who lives in plenty.
The people are apter to applaud housekeepers than houseraisers. Wotton.
3. One who lives much at home.
How do you both? You are manifest housekeepers. What are you doing here? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
4. A woman servant that has care of a family, and superintends the other maid servants.
Merry folks, who want by chance
A pair to make a country-dance,
Call the old housekeeper, and get her
To fill a place for want of better. Swift.
5. A housekeeper.
Distinguish the housekeeper, the hunter. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
H/USEKEEPING. adj. [from house and keep.] Domestic; useful to a family.
His house, for pleasant prospect, large scope, and other house- keeping commodities, challengeth the pre-eminence. Carver.
H/USEKEEPING. n. f. Hospitality; liberal and plentiful table.
I hear your grace hath sworn out housekeeping. Shakespeare.
His table was one of the last that gave us an example of the old housekeeping of an English nobleman: an abundance reigned, which shewed the master's hospitality. Prior.
H/USEL. n. f. [Dybl, Saxon, from huse, Gothic, a sacrifice, or holocaust, dimin. hustola, Latin.] The holy eucharist.
To H/USEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To give or receive the eucharist. Both the noun and verb are obsolete.
H/USELEK. n. f. [from house and leek.] A plant.
The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expanded in form of a rose; out of whose flower cup rises the pointal, which afterwards turns to a fruit, composed, as it were, of many seed-vessels resembling hulks, which are collected into a sort of head, and full of small seeds. The species are six. Miller.
The acerbis supply their quantity of cruder acids; as juices of apples, grapes, the sorrels, and houseleek. Floyer.
H/USELESS. adj. [from house.] Without abode; wanting habitation.
Poor naked wretches,
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you. Shakespeare.
This hungry, houseless, suffering, dying Jesus, fed many thousands with five loaves and two fishes. Wright.
H/USEMAID. n. f. [from house and maid.] A maid employed to keep the house clean.
The housemaid may put out the candle against the lookingglass. Swift.
H/USEROOM. n. f. [from house and room.] Place in a house.
House, that costs him nothing, he bestows;
Yet still we scribble on, though still we lose. Dryden's Juven.
H/USEWARMING. n. f. A kind of meal.
H/USEWARMING. n. f. [from house and warm.] A feast or merry-making upon going into a new house.

used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental.
H/USING. adj. [from house.] Provided for entertainment at first entrance into a house; housewarming.
His own two hands the holy knot did knit,
That none but death for ever can divide;
His own two hands, for such a twin most fit,
The housing fire did kindle and provide. Fairy Queen, b. i.
H/USSE. n. f. [from housing, or house, French.] Covering of cloath originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental; housing. This word, though used by Dry- den, I do not remember in any other place.

HOW

Six lions hides, with thongs together fast,
His upper part defended to his waist;
And where man ended, the continu'd vest,
Spread on his back, the hows and trappings of a beast. Dryden.
H/USEWIFE. n. f. [from house and wife.] This is now frequently written housewife, or hussy. The mistress of a family.
You will think it unfit for a good housewife to stir in or to busy herself about her housewifery. Spenser on Ireland.
I have room enough, but the kind and hearty housewife is dead. Pope to Swift.
3. A female economist.
Fitting is a mantle for a bad man, and surely for a bad housewife it is no less convenient; for some of them, that be wandering women, it is half a wardrobe. Spenser on Ireland.
Let us fit and mock the good housewife, fortune, from her wheel, that her gift may henceforth be disposed equally. Shakespeare.
Farmers in degree,
He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryden.
Early housewives leave the bed,
When living embers on the hearth are spread. Dryden.
The fairest among the daughters of Britain threw themselves good statewomen as well as good housewives. Addison's Freehold.
3. One killed in female business.
He was bred up under the tuition of a tender mother, till she made him as good an housewife as herself; he could preserve apocryphs, and make jellies. Addison's Spectator.

Thick clouds put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents. Bacon's New Atlantis.
HOWE. adv. [from how be it.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding.
Howe. } ing; yet; however. Not now in use.
Siker thou speakst like a lewd lorrel,
Of heaven to deemest so,
Howe I am but rude and borrel, Spenser.
Yet nearer ways I know.
Things so ordained are to be kept, howbeit not necessarily, any longer than 'till there grow some urgent cause to ordain
the contrary. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.
There is a knowledge which God hath always revealed unto them in the works of nature: this they honour and esteem highly as profound wisdom, howbeit this wisdom saveth them not. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
There was no army transmitted out of England, howbeit
the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish. Davies on Ireland.
HOWE. [Contracted from how do ye.] In what state is your health. A message of civility.
Years make men more talkative, but less writative; so that I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain howe's, to those few I am forced to correspond with. Pope.
HOWEVER. adv. [from how and ever.]
1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.
This ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howe'er repented of. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
To trace the ways
Of highest agents, deem'd however wife. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. At all events; happen what will; at least.
Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, however from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, however the chiefest. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.
In your excuse your love does little say;
You might however have took a fairer way. Dryden.
Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are however at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects. Addison on Italy.
I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of perfection, however I do not exclude it. Aterbury.
Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end; which would, however, be a very useful enquiry. Swift.
To HOWL. v. n. [Dybl, Dutch; ululo, Latin.]
1. To cry as a wolf or dog.
Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howl'd in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd.
If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakespeare.
He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deuter. xxxii. 10.
As when a sort of wolves infest the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light.
Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Pierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns. Smith.
2. To utter cries in distress.
Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab. Jer. xlviii.
The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it rebounds
As if it felt with Scotland. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The noise grows louder still!
Rattling of armour, trumpets, drums and ataballes;
And sometimes peals of shouts that rend the heavens;
Like victory: then groans again, and howlings
Like those of vanquish'd men. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To speak with a bellune cry or tone.
Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To savages, and howl it out in deserts!
Me wouldst thou make the accomplice of thy crimes?
A. Philis's Discreet Mother.

ship, is hard. Watts's Logic.
HU'BBUB. n. f. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up us, or hehubb.] A tumult; a riot.
People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people. Clarendon.
An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning founds, and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Why wolves raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs howl when the shines in water. Hudibras, p. ii.

Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone. Swift.
3. To cover up in haste.
4. To perform in a hurry.
I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play buddl'd up in haste. Dryden.
When continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house refrain,
Let him forecall his work with timely care,
Which else is buddled when the skies are fair. Dryden's Virgil.
5. To throw together in confusion.
Our adversary, buddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Lake.

HUF

- To Hu'p'nt'k. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurty.
Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so buddled on his back,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shakespeare.
Brown answered after his blunt and buddling manner. Lacon.
Thyfls, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The buddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton.
Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and, buddling forwards, fall from high places. L'Estrange.
HU'DDLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion.
That the Aristotelian philosophy is a buddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. G. and.
Your carrying business in a buddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model. Hudibras, p. iii.
Nature doth nothing in a buddle. L'Estrange.
The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote,
and in a buddle. Locke.

directeth the course of the pilchard. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
HUFF. n. s. [from hove, or hove, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to leave or ferment: buff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]
1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.
Quoth Ralph, honour's but a word
To swear by only in a loud;
In others it is but a huff,
To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras, p. ii.
His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose huff.
All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.
We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness. L'Estrange.
A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction. L'Estrange.
No man goes about to enslave or circumvent another in a passion, to lay train, and give secret blows in a present huff. South's Sermons.
2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.
Lewd shallow-brained buffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit. South.
As for you, colonel buff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]

HUGE. adj. [huggh, high, Dutch.]
1. Vast; immense.
Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who sees not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker, b. iv.
This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalled in greatness not only Asia, Europe and Africa, but America. Abbt.
2. Great even to deformity or terrible.
The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder. Shakespeare.
Through forests huge, and long untravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown he wanders wate. Thomson's Spring.
HUGELY. adv. [from huge.]
1. Immenely; enormously.
Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shakespeare, As you like it.
2. Greatly; very much.
I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourself in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.
HUGENESS. n. s. [from huge.] Enormous bulk; greatness.
My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
HUGGERMUGGER. n. s. [corrupted perhaps from hug or mucker, or hug in the dark. Mucker in Danish is darkness, whence our mucky. It is written by Sir Thomas More, 1. oler moker.
Hoker, in Chaucer, is peetish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hoake is likewise in German a corner, and mok is in English dark. I know not how to determine.] Secrecy; by-place.
Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Hudibras's Tale.
But if I can but find them out,
Where e'er th' in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy-work. Hudibras, p. i.
There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and barefaced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment. L'Estrange's Fabes.
HUGV. adj. [See HUGLE.] Vast; great; huge.
This hugv rock one finger's force
Apparently will move. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
HUK. n. s. [Hugue, French.] A cloak.
As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger in a rich huk. Bacon's New Atlantis.
HULK. n. s. [hulke, Dutch; hulc, Saxon.]
1. The body of a ship.
There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuf'd in the hold. Shakespeare.

as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [Hule, Scottish.]
2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.
So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a sensible and thinking creature.
Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. i. c. 5.
To HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

An airy nation flew,
Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew
In Summer's heat. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.
I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakespeare.
Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakespeare.
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, you'll rue. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.
Having pump'd up all his wit,
And hum'd upon it, thus he writ. Hudibras, p. iii.
I fill acquiesce,
And never hum'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuffed treason. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.
The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L'Estrange.
Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And last'd so long, like tops, are last'd asleep. Pope.
4. To sing low.
The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate humming; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glavo. Apol.
Hum half a tune. Pope.

lick assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.
Hum. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The noise of bees or insects.
To black Hecate's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums, Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who mufes through the woods at noon. Thomson.
2. The noise of bustling crowds.
From camp to camp, through the soul womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly flows. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton.
One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilome of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis night,
And full of hum and buz from noon 'till night. Dryden.
3. Any low dull noise.
Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope's Dunciad.

HUM

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

marian.
HUMANITY. n. s. [humanité, French; humanitas, Latin.]
1. The nature of man.
Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.
A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shakespeare.
The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.
To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.
2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.
If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his informations. Glan.
3. Benevolence; tenderness.
All men ought to maintain peace, and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.
How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Rowe.
4. Philology; grammatical studies.
To HUMANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, French.] To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Than when it was a doing. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, 'till the point of death. Shak. H. VI.
We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Chuse you for me; for well you understand
But if an humble husband may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryden.

Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:
She should be humble, who would please;
And she must suffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.
Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley mark!
Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.

Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell
With humble fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty. Rowe.

Far humbler titles suit my lost condition. Smith.

To HUMBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.
Take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes. Shakefp. King Lear.

The executioner
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon. Shakefp. As you like it.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Pet. v. 6.

Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chro.

Why do I humble thus myself, and suing
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate. Milton.

Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance: let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.
Yearly injoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride, and joy, for man seduc'd. Milt. P. L.

We are pleased, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us. Addison's Spectator.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addis. Cato.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the public tranquillity. Freeholder.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double tax'd, how little have I lost!
To make to confound. Pope.

3. This would not be to confound to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.

4. To bring down from an height.
In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains. Hakewill on Providence.

HUMBLEBEE. n. f. [from hum and bee.] A buzzing wild bee.
The honeybags steal from the humblebees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs. Shakespeare.

HUMBLENESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humility; absence of pride.
With how true humbleness
They look'd down to triumph over pride! Sidney.

I am rather with all subjected humbleness to thank her excellencies, since the duty therunto gave me rather heart to have myself, than to receive thanks for a deed which was her only inspiring. Sidney, b. i.

It was answered by us all, in all possible humbleness; but yet with a countenance, that we knew that he spoke it but merrily. Bacon's New Atlantis.

A grain of glory, mixt with humbleness,
Cures both a fever and lethargy. Herbert.

HUMBLER. n. f. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others.

To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shaksp.

Here the tam'd Euphrates humbly glides,
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides. Dryden.

Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more. Addison's Spectator.

2. Without height; without elevation.
HUMDRUM. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone.] Dull;
dronish; stupid.
Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum,
And see stout Bruin all alone,
By numbers barely overthrown? Fludibras, p. i.

I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison.

To HUMECT. v. a. [from humectio, Latin; humectate, Fr.]
To HUMECTATE. v. a. To wet; to moisten.
The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate
the earth by their annual inundations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Her rivers are wheeled up into small cataracts, and so divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil, and make it wonderfully productive. Huet's Pascal Fortify.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Wyseman's Surgery.

HUMECTATION. n. f. [from humectation, Fr. from humectate.] The act of wetting; moistening.
Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without humectation, or entrance of any body. Bacon's Natural History.

That which is concreted by exiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HUMERAL. adj. [from humeral, Fr. from humerus, Latin.] Belonging to the shoulder.
The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

HUMIFICATION. n. f. [from hum and cubo, Latin.] The act of lying on the ground.
Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humifications, used to be companions of repentance. Cranehall.

HUMID. adj. [from humide, French; humidus, Lat.] Wet; moist; watery.
Iris there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingl'd hue
Than her purpled scarf can shew. Milton.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryden.

If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opt.

HUMIDITY. n. f. [from humiditas, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, de- ending altogether on the con-gruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to;
but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbage, and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumpion: we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare.

O blessing-breeding fun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb Infect the air. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relishing. Arbutnot on Diet.

HUMILIATION. n. f. [French.]
1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.
The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter

HUM

latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker, b. v. f. 55.

Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milt. Pa. Legl.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.
John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

With tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. Pa. Legl.

3. Abatement of pride.
It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. f. [from humilitas, French.]
1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.
When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shakefp. Richard III.

What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a Christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.

The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarend.

There are some that use Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wish'd journey's end. Denham's Sophy.

It is an easy matter, when there is no danger of a trial, to extol humility in the midst of honours, or to begin a fast after dinner. Squib's Sermons.

As high towers, for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.
With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.

HUMMER. n. f. [from hum.] An applauder. Ainsworth.

HUMORAL. adj. [from humor.] Proceeding from the humours.
This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.

HUMORIST. n. f. [from humorista, Italian; humoriste, French.]
1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.
The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Speclator.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts's Logick.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives a vast refuse of his superfluities to purchase heaven.
Addison's Spectator.

2. One who has violent and peculiar passions.
By a wife and timous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Fishers.

HUMOROUS. adj. [from humor.]
1. Full of grotesque or odd images.
Some of the commentators tell us, that Marfya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satire Marfyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;
And pensive, waw'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what. Prior.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.
I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety.
He's humorous as Winter, and as sudden
As flaws congeal'd in the spring of day, Shakefp. Hen. IV.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay;
What doth make you thus delay?
Vast is his courage, boundless is his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Ben. Johnson.

HUM

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts's Logick.

3. Pleasant; jocular.
HUMOROUSLY. adj. [from humorous.]
1. Merrily; jocosely.
A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls, very humorously, con-cium argentum in titulos facie, que minuat. Addison on Medals.

We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, fillicly, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Calamy.

It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

2. With caprice; with whim.
HUMOROUSNESS. n. f. [from humorous.] Fickleness; capricious levity.
HUMORS. mf. adj. [from humor.]
1. Peevish; petulant.
2. Odd; humorous.
Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades, where the wit of both sexes is alto ether taken up in continuing singular and humorous disguises. Swift.

HUMORSOMELY. adv. [from humorsome.] Peevishly; petulantly.

HUMOUR. n. f. [from humor, French; humor, Latin.]
1. Moisture.
The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perpicuity and fluidity of common water. Kay on the Creation.

2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.
Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton's Aganistes.

3. General turn or temper of mind.
As there is no humour, to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of deperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney, b. ii.

There came with her a young lord, led hither with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whole goodness he sees not. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lufen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was; they said Lufen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lufen: said the king, I will be king of Lufen. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd,
And which the ruling passion of your mind. Roscommon.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Lryden.

In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison's Freeholder.

Good humour only teaches charms to last,
Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.

4. Present disposition.
It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the blood-house of life. Shakefp. K. John.

Another thought her nobler humour sed. Fairfax, b. ii.

Their humours are not to be won,
But when they are impos'd upon. Fludibras, p. iii.

Tempt not his heavy hand;
But one submissive word which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment.

6. Diseased or morbid disposition.
He was a man frank and generous; when well, denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.

7. Petulency; peevishness.
Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed? South's Sermons.

8. A trick; a practice.
I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in some humours: I should have born the humour'd letter to her.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.
In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in comfort, men are more obnoxious to others humours; therefore it is good to take both. Bacon's Essays.

To HUMOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To gratify; to soothe by compliance.
If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men;
if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakefp.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,
He should not humour me. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.

HUN

Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to honour the passions, lusts, and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governors. Swift.

You honour me, when I am sick; Pope.

Why not when I am splenetic? Pope.

Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and sullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not honoured in that fancy. Watts's Logic.

2. To fit; to comply with.

To after age thou shalt be writ the man,
That with smooth air couldst honour best our tongue. Milt.

'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to honour that invention. Dryden's Preface to Albion.

Fountainbleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has honoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature. Addison's Guardian.

HUMP. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by succeeding matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the bump fell. Tatler, No. 74.

HUMPBAC. n. f. [bump and back.] Crooked back; high shoulders.

The chief of the family was born with an humpback and very high nose. Tatler.

HUMPBACED. adj. Having a crooked back.

To HUNCH. v. a. [bush, German.]

Jack's friends began to bunch and push one another: why don't you go and cut the poor fellow down? Arbutnot.

2. [Hacker, a crooked back, German.] To crook the back.

Thy crooked mind within bunch'd out thy back,
And wander'd in thy limbs: to thy own kind
Make love, if thou canst find it in the world. Dryden.

HUNCHBACKED. adj. [bunch and back.] Having a crooked back.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flat-nosed, and bunchbacked. L'Estrange.

But I more fear Creon!

To take that bunchback'd monster in my arms,
Th' execrable of a man. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with fauceryes, a sharp nose, and bunchbacked. Arbutnot. Hist. of J. Bull.

HUNDRED. adj. [humb, humbred, Saxon; hundred, Dutch.] The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A base, proud, three suited, hundred pound, filthy, worsted flocking knave. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke,
A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryd. Æn.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HUNDRED. n. f.

1. A company or body consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whosoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbutnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [Hundredum, low Latin; hundreds, old French.]

Imposits upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket usually sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited. Hayw.

HUNDRETH. adj. [hundred, Saxon.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making invectives. Hooker.

If this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.

HUNG. The preterite and part. pass. of hang.

A wife so hung with virtues, such a freight,
What mortal shoulders can support! Dryden's Juvenal.

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once. Watts.

HUNGER. n. f. [hunger, Saxon; honger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach; and this is occasioned by the attrition of the coats of the stomach against each other.

Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst. Deutr. xxviii. 48.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger. Grew.

Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hunger for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

To HUNGER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness.

Do'st thou hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invent thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

My more having, would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I content me,
And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed Me hunger more to do my father's will. Milton's P. Lof.

HUNGERBIT. adj. [hunger and bit.] Pained or weak.

HUNGERBITTEN. adj. ended with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side. Job xviii. 12.

Thyself
Bred up in poverty and straits at home;
Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton's Parad. Reg.

HUNGERLY. adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

His beard
Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to alk
His lips as he was drinking. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

HUNGERLY. adv. With keen appetite.

You have fav'd my longings, and I feed
Most hungerly on your sight. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakespeare's Othello.

HUNGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shakespeare's H. VI.

O'ertake me, if thou canst; I scorn thy strength:
Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakespeare's H. VI.

As to some holy house th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,
Want and diseases, fled before her name. Dryden.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours out in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungred love to smell hot bread. Bacon's Natural History.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suff'ring mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungry they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden's Juven.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shakespeare's Jul. Caesar.

The more fat water will bear soap best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon's Natural History.

In rusty grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To this great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil. Smalridge's Sermon.

HUNKS. n. f. [hunkur, fordid, Islandick.] A covetous fordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

Irish has given all the intimations of being a close hunk worth money. Addison's Spectator.

HUN

To HUNT. v. a. [punzian, Saxon, from huns, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shakespeare's H. V.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job xxxviii. 39.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison's Spectator.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Pf. cxi.

The heart strikes five hundred fort of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that faint would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Speiser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from the principles it is pretended to be built upon: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison's Spectator.

To HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

On the old pagan tombs, hunting matches, and Bacchanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd
By foreign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakespeare.

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

One who chases animals for pastime.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, boggs, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milt. Par. Lof.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guileless gore. Dryden's Æn.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the val'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HUNTRESS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway. Shakespeare.

Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste.
Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope's Windsor Forest.

Hunter represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Breene.

HUNTER. n. f. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a hunter, after weary chase,

HUR

Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser's Sonnets.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
The hunter of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the hunter, that managed the chase, than to the master. L'Estrange's Fables.

HUNTERMANSHIP. n. f. [from hunter.] The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give th' art of rhiming, hunterman, or play. Donne.

HURLWIND. n. f. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust.

A word not in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.

HURLY. n. f. [I have been told that this word owes its original to two neighbouring families named Hurly and Burly, or Hurleigh and Burleigh, which filled their part of the kingdom with contests and violence. If this account be rejected, the word must be derived from hurl, hurly, and burly, a ludicrous reduplication. Hurlade, French; hurlabreus, inconsiderately.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurly death itself awakes. Shakespeare's H. IV.

Poor discontented,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly innovation. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

HUR

Metinks, I see this hurly all on foot. Shakefp. K. John.
All places were filled with tumult and hurlyburly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged. Knollet.
HU'RRICANE. } n. f. [huracan, Spanish; ouragan, French.] A HU'RRICANO. } violent storm, such as is often experienced in the eastern hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricane's spout. Shakefp. K. Lear.
A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havock where it comes. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;
There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.
So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison.
To HU'RRY. v. a. [hurry, to plunder, Saxon; hurs was likewife a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends. Shakespeare.
For whom all this haste
Of midnight march, and hurried meeting here? Milton.
Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy the cravings of it.
South's Sermons.

That hurry'd o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore. Dryden.
A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Addison's Spectator.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away. Rowe's Royal Convert.
If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

To HU'RRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.
Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end. Dryd. Aurengz.
HU'RRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England, Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.
It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection. South's Sermons.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over,
the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Warton.
Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison's Spectator.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry. Addison's Guardian.
I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hur- ry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Addison.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street. Gay's Trivia.

HU'RTLESSLY. adv. [from hurtless.] Without harm.

Your neighbours have found you so hurtlessly strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity. Silney.

HU'RTLESSNESS. n. f. [from hurtless.] Freedom from any pernicious quality.

HU'SBAND. n. f. [husband, master, Danish, from huse and banda, Runick, a master.]

1. The correlative to wife; a man married to a woman.
Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign. Shakefp. Taming of the Shrew.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so takes on yonder with my husband, and so rails against all married mankind. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

'Tis his careful husband had been long away,
Whom his chaffewife and little children mourn. Dryden.

The contract and ceremony of marriage is the occasion of the denomination or relation of husband. Locke.

2. The male of animals.
Ev'n though a snowy ram thou shalt behold,
Prefer him not in haste, for husband to thy fold. Dryden.

3. An economist; a man that knows and practises the methods of frugality and profit. Its signification is always modified by some epithet implying bad or good.

Edward I. shew'd himself a right good husband; owner of a lordship ill husbanded. Davies on Ireland.

I was considering the shortness of life, and what ill husbands
we are of so tender a fortune. Collier on Fame.

4. A tiller of the ground; a farmer.
Husband's work is laborious and hard. Hubbard's Tale.

I heard a great husband say, that it was a common error to think that chalk helpeth arable grounds. Bacon's Nat. History.

In those fields
The painful husband plowing up his ground,
Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields. Hakewill.

If continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecall his work. Dryden's Georgicks.

To HU'SBAND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with an husband.
Think you I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd and so husband'd? Shak. Julius Cæsar.

If you shall prove
This ring was ever her's, you shall as easy
Prove that I husband'd her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. Shakespeare.

In my right,
By me invested, he compeers the best —That were the most, if he should husband you. Shakefp.

2. To manage with frugality.
It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty. Shakespeare.

HUS

The French, wisely husbanding the possession of a victory, kept themselves within their trenches. Bacon's Henry VII.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can't speak at once; but husband it, Herbert.

And give men turns of speech.
To till; to cultivate the ground with proper management.

3. A farmer cannot husband his ground, if he sits at a great rent. Bacon's Essays.

HU'SBANDLESS. adj. [from husband.] Without an husband.

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears. Shakefp. King John.

HU'SBANDLY. adj. [from husband.] Frugal; thrifty.
Bare plots full of galls, if ye plow overthwart;
And compals it then, is a husbandly part. Tussl. Husbandry.

HU'SBANDMAN. n. f. [husband and man.] One who works in tillage.

This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man, and your husbandman. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

The mule being more swift in his labour than the ox, more ground was allowed to the mule by the husbandman. Bacon.

HU'SBANDRY. n. f. [from husband.]
1. Tillage; manner of cultivating land.

He began with a wild method to run over all the art of husbandry, especially employing his tongue about well dunging of a fell. Sidney, b. ii.

Alkt if in husbandry he ought did know, Hubbard's Tale.
To plough, to plant, to reap, to sow.
Husbandry supplieth unto us all things necessary for food. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Peace hath from France too long been chas'd;
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility. Shakefp. Henry V.

Her plenteous womb
Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakespeare.

The feeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of Christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature. Raleigh's History of the World.

Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valley of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear seed. Raleigh's H. of the World.

A family governed with order, will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage, and pasturage. Temple.

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.

2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.
There's husbandry in heaven;
The candles are all out. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

You have already faved several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestic affairs.
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shakespeare.

HUSH. interj. [Without etymology.] Silence! be still! no noise!

The king hath done you wrong; but hush! 'tis so. Shak.
There's something else to do; hush and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakespeare's Tempest.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heav'n; the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

To HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.] To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame did blush;
Another seem'd envious or coy;
Another in her teeth did gnaw a rush;
But at these strangers' presence every one did hush. F. Queen.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush, and nought at all to say. Shakefp. Rich. II.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blustering land. Sh. K. John.

Speak softly;
All's hush as midnight yet. Shakespeare's Tempest.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me. Shakespeare.

When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads, Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love? Orway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.

Her fire at length is kind,
Calms ev'ry storm, and hushes ev'ry wind;
Prepares his empire for his daughter's care,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

HUT

Upon his rising the court was hushed, and a whisper ran.
Addison's Spectator.

To HUSH up. v. a. To suppress in silence; to forbid to be mentioned.

This matter is hushed up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.

HU'SHONEY. n. f. [hush and money.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

A dextrous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushmoney sends to all the neighbours round;
His master, unobservant of his pranks,
Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.

HUSK. n. f. [huldech, Dutch, or huycken, from huyt.] The outmost integument of fruits.

Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Slak. H. V.

Most seeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon's Natural History.

Thy food shall be
The fresh brook mussels, withered roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Fruits of all kinds, in coat
Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
Heaps with unparing hand. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Some steep their seeds, and some in cauldrons boil
O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husks with fruitful grain. Dryden.

Some when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,
Has drain'd the pulposus mafs, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; thou, more wife, shalt steep
The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine. Phillips.

Barley for ptisan was first steeped in water 'till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat 'till the husk was taken off, and ground. Arbutnot on Cans.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, left you only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases, and feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To HUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.

HU'SKED. adj. [from husk.] Bearing an husk; covered with a husk.

HU'SKY. adj. [from husk.] Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.

Most have found
A husky harvest from the grudging ground. Dryden's Virgil.

With timely care
Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain shouldst seek a strainer, to dispart
The husky terrere dregs from purer must. Phillips.

HU'SKY. n. f. [corrupted from hou wife: taken in an ill sense.]
A forry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disapprobation.

Get you in, hussy, go: now will I personate this hopeful young jade. Southern's Innocent Adultery.

HU'STINGS. n. f. [huyting, Saxon.] A council; a court held.

To HU'TLE. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hurtle.] To shake together.

HU'SWIFE. n. f. [corrupted from huswife.]
1. A bad manager; a forry woman. It is common to use hus- wife in a good, and huswife or hussy in a bad sense.

Bianca,
A huswife, that, by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and cloth. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. An economist; a thrifty woman.
Why should you want?
The bounteous huswife, nature, on each bush
Lays her fulness before you. Shakespeare.

To HU'SWIFE. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage with economy and frugality.

But huswifery the little heav'n had lent,
She duly paid a groat for quarter-rent;
And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two,
To bring the year about with much ado. Dryden.

HU'SWIFERY. n. f. [from huswife.]
1. Management good or bad.

Good huswifery trieth
To rise with the cock;
Ill huswifery lyeth
'Till nine of the clock. Tusser.

2. Management of rural business committed to women.
If cheeques in dairie have Argus his eyes,
Tell Cistley the fault in her huswifery lies. Tussl. Husbandry.

HUT. n. f. [hutte, Saxon; hute, French.] A poor cottage.

Our wand'ring fairs, in woful state,
To a small cottage came at last,
Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,
Who kindly did these fairs invite
In his poor hut to pass the night. Swift.

2. Sure

HYD

Sore pierc'd by wintry wind,
How many shrink into the fordid hut
Of cheerless poverty. Thomson.
HUTCH. n. f. [hycca. Saxon; buche, French.] A corn chest.
The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in butcher, or clove casks. Mert.
To Huzz. v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur.
Huzza'. interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.
The buzzas of the rabble are the fame to a bear that they are to a prince. L'Estrange.
It was an unfair thing in you to keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night, with buzzas and hunting horns never let me cool. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid flatters and of loud buzzas. Pope's Essay on Man.
To Huzza'. v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.
A caldron of fat beef, and sloop of ale,
On the huzzing mob shall fill prevail. King's Cookery.
To Huzza'. v. a. To receive with acclamation.
He was huzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Addison.
HYACINTH. n. f. [ὑακινθός; hyacinthos, Fr. hyacinthus, Lat.]
1. A plant.
It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Miller.
The silken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,
Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope's Odyssey.
2. The hyacinth is the same with the lapis hyacinthus of the ancients. It is a less shewy gem than any of the other red ones, but not without its beauty, though not gaudy. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow, which even sometimes seems predominant: but its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour. This gem is found in several parts of Europe; but the finest sort comes from the East and West Indies.
HYACINTHINE. adj. [ὑακινθινός;] Made of hyacinths.
HYADES. n. f. [ὑάδες;] A watry constellation.
HYADS. n. f. [ὑάδες;] A watry constellation.
Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For ev'ry fix'd and ev'ry wand'ring star;
The pleiads, hyads. Dryden's Georgicks.
HYALINE. adj. [ὑάλινος;] Glassy; crystalline; made glass;
resembling glass.
From heav'n-gate not far, founded in view
On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea. Milton's Parad. Lost.
HYBRIDOUS. adj. [ὑβριδός; hybridos, Latin.] Begotten between animals of different species.
Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.
HYDATIDES. n. f. [from ὑδῶν;] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphatics; for they happen mostly in parts abounding with those vessels. Quincy.
All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. W. sem.
HYDRA. n. f. [ὑδρα, Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.
New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.
More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin. Dryden's Æn.
Subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.
HYDRAGOGUES. n. f. [ὑδρογῶγες; hydragogues, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly by their vellications the bowels and their appendages, so as to squeeze out water enough to make the stools seem to be little else. Quincy.
HYDRAULICAL. adj. [from hydraulic.] Relating to the construction of engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted not contemptible ones, and divers other hydrau- tical engines. Dorham's Physico-Theology.
We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulic engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels. Arbutnot and Pope's Miscr. Scriblers.
HYDRAULICKS. n. f. [ὑδραυλική, water, and ὁδός; a pipe.]

HYG

The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.
HYDROCELE. n. f. [ὑδροκήλη; hydrocele, Fr.] A watery rupture.
HYDROCEPHALUS. n. f. [ὑδροκεφαλή;] A dropy in the head.
A hydrocephalus, or dropy of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain. Arbutnot on Dis.
HYDROGRAPHER. n. f. [ὑδρογράφος; hydrographer, Fr.]
One who draws maps of the sea.
It may be drawn from the writings of our hydrogra- pher. Arbutnot on Dis.
HYDROGRAPHY. n. f. [ὑδρογραφία; hydrographie, Fr.]
Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.
HYDROMANCY. n. f. [ὑδρομαντία; hydromantie, Fr.]
Prediction by water.
Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy.
HYDROMEL. n. f. [ὑδρομέλι; hydromel, Fr.] Honey and water.
Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient. Mac-timer's Husb.
In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were ptisans and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbutnot.
HYDROMETER. n. f. [ὑδρομέτρον;] An instrument to measure the extent of water.
HYDROMETRY. n. f. [ὑδρομετρία;] The act of measuring the extent of water.
HYDROPHOBIA. n. f. [ὑδροφοβία; hydrophobia, Fr.] Dread of water.
Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the dread of water is the most remarkable. Quincy.
HYDROPHIC. adj. [ὑδροφικός; hydrophique, French; from ὑδρῶς, water, and φικός, Latin.] Dropical; diseased with extravasated water.
Cantharides heats the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydrophic water. Lacoon's Nat. Hist.
The world's whole sap is sunk:
The general balm th' hydrophic earth hath drunk;
Whither, as to the bedstead, life is shrunk,
Dead and interr'd. D. mac.
Some mens hydrophic insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.
Hydrophic swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. W. sem.
Every lust is a kind of hydrophic distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson's Sermons.
Hydrophic wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away;
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.
One sort of remedy he uses in dropies, viz. the water of the hydrophic, which is a remedy for the distemper. Arbutnot.
HYDROSTATICAL. adj. [ὑδροστατική;] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.
A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be recon-cillable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst. Isaiah.
HYDROSTATICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics.
The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass. Bentley's Sermon.
HYDROSTATICKS. n. f. [ὑδροστατικά; hydrostatiques, Fr.]
The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.
HYDROTICK. n. f. [ὑδροτικός; hydrotique, French.] Purger of water or phlegm.
He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile. Arbutnot on Dis.
HYEN. n. f. [ὑιήνη; French; hyena, Latin.] An animal like HYENNA. n. f. [ὑιήνη;] A wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.
I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep. Shakespeare.
A wonder more amazing would we find;
The hyena shews it, of a double kind:
Varying the sexes in alternate years,
In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden's Fables.
The hyena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the hyena adorned, or civet cat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The keen hyena, fellest of the felines. Thomson's Sermon.
HYGROMETER. n. f. [ὑγρομέτρον; hygrometre, French.]
An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.
A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river. Arbutnot on Air.
HYGROSCOPE. n. f. [ὑγροσκόπος; hygroscopie, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme. Quincy.
Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes. Arbutnot.
HYLA'RHICAL.

HYP

HYLA'RHICAL. adj. [ὑλαρικός;] Preceding over matter.
HYM. n. f. A species of dog.
Avant, you curs!
Mastiff, greyhound, mungil grim,
Hound or spaniel, brache or hym;
Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail,
Tom will make him weep and wail. Shakespeare. King Lear.
HYMEN. n. f. [ὑμῆν;]
1. The god of marriage.
2. The virginal membrane.
HYMENEAL. n. f. [ὑμηναιός;] A marriage song.
HYMENEAN. n. f. [ὑμηναιός;] A marriage song.
And heav'nly choirs the hymenean sung. Milt. Par. Lost.
For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;
For her white virgins hymeneal sing. Pope.
HYMENEAL. adj. Pertaining to marriage.
The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice
A signal of her hymeneal choice. Pope's Odyssey.
HYMN. n. f. [ὑμνος; Fr. hymne, Fr. hymne, Fr.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.
As I earst, in praise of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I cke should frame. Spenser.
Our solemn hymns to sudden dings change;
Our bridal flows serve for a buried coarse. Shakespeare.
When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made
An overture for the wars. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.
Farewel, you happy shades,
Where angels first should practise hymns, and string
Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would sing. Dryd.
To HYMN. v. a. [ὑμνῶ;] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.
To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.
They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.
He had not left alive this patient faint,
This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
HYMNICK. adj. [ὑμνικός;] Relating to hymns.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.
To HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.
Have been, to the last degree, hyp since I saw you. Spekt.
HYPALLAGE. n. f. [ὑπάλλαξις;] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.
HYPER. n. f. [ὑπερ;] A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick. A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.
Criticks I read on other men,
And hyper upon them again. Prior.
HYPERBOLA. n. f. [ὑπερβολή; Fr. hyperbole, Fr. hyperbole, Fr.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.
Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentric. Bentley's Sermon.
HYPERBOLE. n. f. [ὑπερβολή; Fr. hyperbole, Fr. hyperbole, Fr.] A figure in rhe-torick by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His passions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shakespeare.
Terms unquar'd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
Tassata phrases, sicken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare.
They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Glauv. Seoffs. c. 1.
Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disfanning bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight. Gravv.
The common people understand rallery, or at least rheto-rick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift.

HYP

HYPERBO'ICAL. adj. [ὑπερβολικός; French; from hyper- hyperbo'ick.] bolos.
1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyper- bola.
Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbo'ick lines. Grew's Anatomy.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbo'ick or parabolical figure. Ray on the Creation.
2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.
It is parabolical, and probably hyperbo'ick, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense. Boyle.
HYPERBO'ICALLY. adv. [from hyperbo'ick.]
1. In form of an hyperbola.
2. With exaggeration or extenuation.
Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbo'ically. Brown.
Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbo'ically described by Homer as inaccessible. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.
HYPERBO'IFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.
HYPERBO'ICAN. n. f. [hyperboreus, French; hyperboreus, Lat.]
Northern.
HYPERCRITICK. n. f. [ὑπερκριτικός; Fr. hypercritique, Fr. hypercritique, Fr.]
A critick exact or captious beyond use or reason.
Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges of antiquity, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages. Dryd.
HYPERCRITICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.
We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical pun-tilios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to. Evelyn.
Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner. Swift.
HYPERMETER. n. f. [ὑπερμέτρον;] Any thing greater than the standard requires.
When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club. Addison's Guardian.
HYPERSCAROSIS. n. f. [ὑπερσκαρώσις; hyperscarosis, Fr. hyperscarosis, Fr.]
The growth of fungous or proud flesh.
Where the hyperscarosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction. Wise's Surgery.
HYPHEN. n. f. [ὑφή;] A note of conjunction: as, vir-tue, ever-living.
HYPOCRITICK. n. f. [ὑπόκριτος;] Any medicine that induces sleep.
HYPOCHONDRES. n. f. [ὑποχόνδρες; Fr. hypochondres, Fr.] The two regions lying on each side the cartilago ensiformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen. Quincy.
The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenterick arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Arbutnot on Aliments.
HYPOCHONDRIACAL. adj. [ὑποχονδριακή;] Relating to the hypochondriack. Arbutnot on Aliments.
HYPOCHONDRIACK. n. f. [ὑποχονδριακή;] Relating to the hypochondriack.
1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.
Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety.
2. Producing melancholy.
Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected;
as in great fears, and hypochondriack passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. History.
HYPOCRIST. n. f. [ὑπόκρισις; hypocrisis, French.]
Hypocrist is an insipidated juice in large flat masses, considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. It is brought from the Levant, sometimes from France, and other parts of Europe. The stem of the plant, from which it is produced, is thick and fleshy; and, what is singular, much thicker at the top than towards the bottom.
The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, which are garthered before they are ripe; and the juice is expressed, then evaporated over a gentle fire, formed into cakes, and dried in the sun. It is an astringent medicine of considerable power.
Hypo'crisy. n. f. [ὑποκρίσις; Fr. hypocrisie, Fr. hypocrisie, Fr.]
with regard to the moral or religious character.
Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden's Fables.
Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint:
men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.
HYPOCRITE. n. f. [ὑποκριτής; Fr. hypocrite, Fr. hypocrite, Fr.] A dissembler in morality or religion.

HYP

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shak.
A wife man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Echf. xxxiii. 3.
Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryden.
The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.
Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass
Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites,
Who sily speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarm'd drink on,
And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Phillips.
HYPOCRITICAL. adj. [from hypocrite.] Dissembling; insinuating.
HYPOCRITICK. s. cere; appearing differently from the reality.
Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Whatever virtues you appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Roger's Sermon.
Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.
HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.
Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their profelytes and their religion. Government of the Tongue.
HYPOGASTRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, French; ὑπογαστρικὸς, Greek.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.
The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wise's Surgery.
HYPOGASTRUM. n. s. [ὑπογαστρὸν] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.
HYPOGASTRUM. n. s. [hypogastri, French; ὑπογαστρὸν, Greek.] 1. Distinct substance.
2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity. The offices of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypogastri in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those before comprised in the ancient simple article. Hammond on Fundamentals.
HYPOSTATICAL. adj. [hypostatique, French; from hypostasis.] 1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.
Let our Carneades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.
2. Personal; distinctly personal.
HYPOTENUSE. n. s. [hypotenuse, Fr. ὑποτένυσα.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the sub-tense.
The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYS

HYPOTHESIS. n. f. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.
The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarities that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole intelligible. South's Sermon.
With imagin'd sovereignty
Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns:
He reigns: how long? 'till some usurper rise;
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.
HYPOTHETICAL. adj. [hypothetique, Fr. from hypothese.] In-HYPOTHETICK. s. cluding a supposition; conditional.
Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts's Logic.
HYPOTHETICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.
The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Brace's Net-work of the Idiosyncrasy.
HYST. s. Are all from the Saxon hys, a word in grove. Giff.
HURST. s. herst, a word in grove. Giff.
HERST. s. herst, a word in grove. Giff.
HYSSOP. n. f. [hyssop, L. hyssopus, Lat.] A verticillate plant, with long narrow leaves: the crest of the flower is roundish, erect, and divided into two parts: the beard is divided into three parts; the middle part is hollowed like a spoon, having a double point, and is somewhat winged: the whorles of the flowers are short, and at the lower part of the stalk are placed at a great distance; but toward the top are closer joined, so as to form a regular spike. It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Miller.
The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.
HYSTERIC. adj. [hysterique, French; ὑστερικὸς, Greek.] 1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.
In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike such an astonishment into spectators, that they report them possessed with the devil. Horrey on Consumption.
Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer on the Hæmorrhoids.
2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.
Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who gave th' hysterick or poetick fit. Pope's Ru. of the Lake
This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbuthnot and Pope's Moral Sentiments.
HYSTERICUS. n. f. [ὑστερικὸς] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

JAC

I. Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.
I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken freend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as thine. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.
A consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant; as jade, jell, jill, jell, just.
1. pronoun personal. [ik, Gothic; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.]
I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us. ic, me, us, ur.
1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.
I do not like these several councils, I. Shaksp. Rich. III.
There is none greater in this house than I. Gen. xxxix. 9.
Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. Mat. xiv. 27.
What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own?
I shall like beasts or common people dye,
Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.
Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.
When chance of business parts us two,
What do our souls, I wonder, do? Cowley.
Of that book you have given us a large earnest. Cowley.
Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden's Æn.
2. Me is in the following passage written for I.
There is but one man whom she can have, and that is me. Clarissa.
3. I is more than once in Shakespeare written for ay, or yet.
Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shakespeare.
Did your letters pierce the queen?
—I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakespeare.
To JABBER. v. n. [jabberen, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.
We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties. Swift.
JABBERER. n. s. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticularly or unintelligibly.
Out came the Babylonian labourers
At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras, p. iii.
JACENT. adj. [jacens, Latin.] Lying at length.
So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the jacent posture. Watson's Architect.
JACINTH. n. f. [for hyacinth, as Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]
1. The same with hyacinth.
2. A gem of a deep redish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward's Met. Foss.
JACK. n. s. [Probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James.]
1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for faucy or paltry fellows.
I am in estimation:
You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot Office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakespeare.
I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
Every Jack slave hath his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match. Shaksp.
2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

JAC

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts's Logic.
3. An engine which turns the spit.
The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Maxon.
The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkins's Math. Adagio.
Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth be never to smooth, yet, if not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.
A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wise's Surgery.
Some strain in rhyme; the mufes on their racks Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.
4. A young pike.
No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer's Husbandry.
5. [Jaques, French.] A coat of mail.
The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.
6. A cup of waxed leather.
Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or grealy mapple cup. Dryden's Pers.
7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.
'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byals, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley's Sermons.
8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.
In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon's Natural History.
9. The male of animals.
A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four pence. Arbuthnot on Coins.
10. A support to saw wood on.
11. The colours or ensign of a ship. Ainsworth.
12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing.
Jack of all trades, shew and found;
An inverse burle, an exchange under ground. Cleveland.
JACK BOOTS. n. s. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.
A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a comode and a night-gail. Spectator.
JACK BY THE HEDGE. n. s. An herb.
Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other sallads are, and much used in broth. Mortm.
JACK PUDDING. n. s. [jack and pudding.] A zani; a merry Andrew.
Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estrange.
A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean pottage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.
Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.
JACK WITH A LANTERN. n. s. [Jack in Lent, a poor starven fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.
You little jack a lent, have you been true to us?
—Ay, I'll be sworn. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
JACKAL. n. s. [chacal, French.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.
The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chafe-guns through our threns they send;
(close by their fireships, like jackals), appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
The

J A I

The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arab. and Pope's M. Scrib.
JACKANAPES. n. f. [jack and ape.]
 1. Monkey; an ape.
 2. A cockcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?
 —That jackanapes with scars. Shakesp.
 People wondered how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him. Arab.
JACKDAW. n. f. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Watts.
JACKET. n. f. [jaquet, French.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.
 In a blue jacket, with a cross of red. Hubbard's Tale.
 And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
 And here a tailor's jacket hangs to dry. Swift.
 Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
 Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.
 She fell upon the jacket of the parson, who stood gaping at her. L'Estrange.

JACON'S LADDER. n. f. The same with Greek valerian.
JACON'S STAFF. n. f.
 1. A pilgrim's staff.
 2. Staff concealing a dagger.

3. A cross staff; a kind of astrolabe.
JACOBINE. n. f. A pigeon with a high tuft. Ainsworth.
JACTITATION. n. f. [jactito, Latin.] Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surpris'd with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harv.
JACULATION. n. f. [jaculatio, jaculo, Latin.] The act of throwing missile weapons.

So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,
 Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milt. Parad. Lost.

JADE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad, or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.
 Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!
 I am as dull as Winter-starved sheep,
 Tired as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,
 They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
 With torches in their hand; and their poor jades
 Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakesp.

To other regions
 France is a stable, we that dwell in't jades;
 Therefore to th' war. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

So have I seen with armed heel
 A wight beset a commonweal,
 While still the more he kick'd and spurr'd,
 The less the fullen jade has stir'd. Hudibras, p. i.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race,
 As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall these, these old jades, past the flower
 Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman's Iliads.

But she, the cunning 't jade alive,
 Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive,
 By sharing female bounties. Stepney.

Get in, huffy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southerne's Innocent Adultery.

In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocades,
 She shines the first of batter'd jades,
 And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.
 You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Add.

JADE. n. f. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hard-nesses. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or as-colour, and a pale green, not simple and uniform, but intermixed. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant and high polish. It is found in the East Indies, and is much used by the Turks for handles of sabres. It is so highly esteemed by the Indians as to be called the divine stone:
 they wear it externally as a remedy for the gravel, and an amulet to preserve them from the bite of venomous animals.

Hill's Materia Medica.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary.
 With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
 The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
 We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

J A I

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon's Essays.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast,
 No favour for the stallion we retain,
 And no respect for the degenerate strain. Dryden's Juven.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; or upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts's Logic.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,
 To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
 Farewell nobility. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.
 The honourable blood
 Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakesp. Ham. VI.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.
 I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me; for every reason excites to this. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.
 Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last;
 they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South's Sermons.

JADISH. adj. [from jade.]
 1. Vicious; bad, as an horse.

That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
 A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras, p. iii.

When once the people get the jadish trick
 Of throwing off their kings, no ruler's safe. Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and eyes in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [jagaw, lit. or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon's Natural History.

The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak-leaves; but they never have any small plain parts. Bac.

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentl.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Hall.

JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.
 The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jags or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jags in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mort. Husbandry.

JAGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.
 His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
 His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
 Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;
 His teeth flood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.

Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd,
 They joyful leave their jaggy fangs behind. Thomson's Autumn.

JAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagged.] The state of being denticated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain with your coal or lead, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacock on Drawing.

JAIL. n. f. [gaol, French.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakesp.
 A dependant upon him paid six pound ready money, which,
 poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He fight'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
 'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all their criminals restrain,
 Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

JAILER. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JAILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunn'd it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
 Some monstrous malefactor. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
 There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
 With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
 And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden's An.

Palamon, the pri'ner knight,
 Reflex for woe, arose before the light;
 And with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
 An air more wholesome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES.

J A R

JAKES. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.
 I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Their fordid avarice rakes
 In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Some have fill'd the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.]

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It was not known in Europe 'till after the discovery of America, and had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative in all cases where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hill's Mat. Med.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB. n. f. [jambe, French.] Any supporter on either side,
 as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the fore-side of the chimney jamb. Mason's Mech. Exer.

JAMBICK. n. f. [jambique, French; jambicus, Latin.] Verses composed of jambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
 It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies;
 Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
 In keen jambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To JANGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercation; to quarrel; to bicker in words.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentiles agree,
 This civil war of wits were much better us'd
 On Navarre and his book-men. Shak. Love's Labour Lost.

So far am I glad it did do fort,
 As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakespeare.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Ruleigh.

To JANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untuneably.
 Now fee that noble and that sovereign reason,
 Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh. Shak. Ham.

'Ere Gothic forms were known in Greece,
 And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes
 Had jangle'd their fantastick chimes. Prior.

JANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

JANIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand visiter, presuming to invest
 The chief imperial city of the West,
 With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
 The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
 Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

JANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bancock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

JASTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, French.] Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is a janty flatterer: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Speclator.

JANUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence. Peucham.

JAPAN. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

To JAPAN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.
 For not the desk with silver nails,
 Nor bureau of exence,
 Nor standish well japan'd, avails
 To writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black shoes. A low phrase.
 The god of fire
 Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
 And aids with foot the new japanning art. Gay's Trivia.

JAPANER. n. f. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.

2. A shoeblacker.

The poor have the same itch;
 They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
 Prefer a new japaner to their shoers. Pope's Horace.

To JAR. v. n. [from corpe, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war,
 French; or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.
 A hollow groan, a murr'ing wind arose;

J A S

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
 Sent out a jarring found, and harshly rung. Dryden.
 My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably.
 O, you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
 Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
 Of this child-changed father. Shakesp. King Lear.

I perceive you delight not in musick. Shakespeare.
 —Not a whit, when it jars so.

A string may jar in the best master's hand,
 And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Rescurren.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
 And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
 Amid' a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakesp.
 For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Venus concluded his report:
 A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
 As when a torrent rolls with rapid force,
 The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
 Roars horrible. Dryden's Æn.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.
 When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
 Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
 Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
 Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.
 In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holler's Elements of Speech.

2. Clash; discord; debate.
 He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
 And yet his peace is but continual jar:
 O miserable men, that to him subject are! Fairy Queen.

Nath'less, my brother, since we parted are Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Hubbard's Tale.

Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
 Between whose endless jar justice precludes
 Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shakesp.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.
 The chattering with dissenters, and dodging about this or other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.
 About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He med for cooling drink prepares,
 Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

Whist empty jars the dire defeat refund. Garth.

JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied.
 It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

JARGON. n. f. [jargon, French; gerisenga, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramhall.

From this last to il again what knowledge flows?
 Just as much, perhaps, as shows
 That all his predecessor's rules
 Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastic jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JARGONELLE. n. f. See PEAR, of which it is a species.

JASHAWK. n. f. A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JASMINE. n. f. [jymn, French. It is often pronounced jefsamine.]

It hath a funnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, which is cut into several segments at the brim, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which afterward becomes the fruit or pod, which, for the most part, grows double and open lengthwise, discovering the seeds, which are oblong, and have a border round them: these are ranged over each other like scales on a house, and are fastened to the placenta. Miller.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
 From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.

JAW

JASMINE Perfian. n. f. A plant. See LILAC, of which it is a species.

JASPER n. f. [jaspe, Fr. iaspis, Lat.] A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China. Hell's Mat. Med. The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow and white. Woodward's Met. Ess.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison on Italy.

JATROLEPTICK adj. [jatroleptique, Fr. iatro; and λεπτός.] That which cures by anointing.

To JAVEL, or jable. v. a. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JAVEL n. f. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering fellow. When as time, flying with wings swift,

Expired had the term that those two javels. Fullb. Tale

Should tender up a reckoning of their javels. Fullb. Tale

JAVELIN n. f. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds. Milt. Pa. Lost.
She shakes her myrtle javelin; and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden's Æn.

Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addis. Cato.

JAUUNDICE n. f. [jaundice, Fr. jaune, yellow, Fr.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straighten the motion of the blood so much through that viscous as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatic, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandire cut in alabaster?

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

What grief hath let the jaundice on your cheeks? Shak.

Those were thy thoughts, and thou couldst judge aright,
'Till interest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinged with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the real appearances of things.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

JAUUNDICED adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundiced eye. Pope.

To JAUNT. v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;

Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shak. R. II.

JAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd sore,

Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milt. Par. Reg.

He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the night to haunt. Eudibras, p. iii.

They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out these metallic and mineral bodies. Woodward.

JAUNTINESS n. f. [from jaunt, or jaunty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airy; flight; flutter; gesticulation.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntiness of air I was once master of. Addison's Spectator.

JAW. n. f. [joue, a cheek, French; whence jauchons, or cheek-bones, then jaw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor. Prov. xxx. 14.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinal. Walton's Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, faith that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immovable. Grew's Musæum.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden's Æn.

ICO

2. The mouth.
My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. Ps. xxii. 15.

My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws. Shakspere.

A sneaky foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame. Rave.

JAY. n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.] A bird.

Two sharp winged theers,
Deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays,

Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Fairy Queen.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpkin—we'll teach him to know ruttles from jays. Shaksp.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shakspere.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when Philomela sings. Pope.

JAZZ. n. f. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. Did.

ICE. n. f. [is, Saxon; eis, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no furer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice.

Or hailstone in the sun. Shakspere's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shaksp. R. III.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ice. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Achieve the elder, set the younger free

For our access, whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not so graciously be to be ingrate. Shakspere.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Peasum on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wife,
At last broke silence and the ice. Hudibras, p. iii.

To ice. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

2. To cover with concreted sugar.

ICEHOUSE. n. f. [ice and house.] A house in which ice is deposited against the warm months.

ICHNEUMON. n. f. [ichneumon.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

ICHNEUMONELY. n. f. A sort of fly.

The generation of the ichneumon is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphæ of insects. Derham's Physico-Theol.

ICHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ichy and γραφία.] The groundplot.

It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front in a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the groundplot or ichnograph of every story in a paper by itself. Mason.

ICHOR. n. f. [ichor.] A thin watery humour like serum.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrify, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor. Avicenna on Aliments.

ICHOROUS. adj. [from ichor.] Sanious; thin; undigested.

The lung-growth is imputed to a superficial fanious or ichorous exulceration. Harvey on Corium tians.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels. Avicenna on Diet.

ICHTHYOLOGY. n. f. [ichthy and λογία, from ichthys and λόγος.] The doctrine of the nature of fish.

Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ICHTHYOPHAGY. n. f. [ichthys and φαγία.] Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

ICICLE. n. f. [from ice.] A shoot of ice hanging down from the upper part.

If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subsiding powder, dried, retains some magnetic virtue; but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards doth shoot into icicle, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

From locks uncombed, and from the frozen beard,
Long icicles depend, and crackling sounds are heard. Dryd.

The common dropstone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an icicle, hanging down from the tops and sides of grotto's. Woodward's Nat. History.

ICINESS. n. f. [from ice.] The state of generating ice.

ICON. n. f. [εἰκών.] A picture or representation.

Boysardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Some of our own nation, and many Netherlanders, whose names and icons are published, have deserved good commendation. Hakewill on Precedent.

ICO'NOCLAST.

IDE

ICO'NOCLAST. n. f. [iconoclaste, French; εικονοκλαστής.] A breaker of images.

ICTERIC. n. f. [ictérique, French; icterus, Latin.]

1. Afflicted with the jaundice.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting, and the icteric have a great sourness, and gripes with windiness. Floyer.

2. Good against the jaundice.

ICY. adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as, the icy phang,

And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind. Shakspere.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in Summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her cross display
To the bright regions of the rising day;

Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou wouldst have never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect. Shaksp. Timon.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;

If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspere's Richard III.

IDE. n. f. [idé, French; idea.] Mental imagination.

Whatever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea. Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea. Watts.

Happy you that may to the faint, your only idea,
Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter. Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven. Hosker, b. i.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts. Fairfax.

I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,

Both in your form and nobleness of mind. Shaksp. R. III.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he fet. Dryden.

IDEAL. adj. [from idea.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; one real, when the things, and the real impression thereof on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing, absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination. Chyane's Phil. Prin.

IDEALLY. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IDENTICAL. adj. [identique, French.] The same; implicitly.

IDENTICK. adj. [ing the same thing; comprising the same idea.

The beard's th' identick beard you knew,
The same numerically true. Hudibras, p. ii.

There majus is identical with magis. Hale's Origin of Man.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotson's Sermon.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, inviolable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley's Sermons.

IDENTITY. n. f. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South's Sermon.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

It cuts off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, and consequently produces too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES. n. f. [ides, Fr. idus, Lat.] A term anciently used among the

IDL

Romans, and still retained in the Romish kalendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days. Trevaux.

A footfayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shaksp.

IDIOCRASY. n. f. [idiocrasie, French; ἰδιόκρασις and κράσις.] Peculiarity of constitution.

IDIOCRITICAL. adj. [from idiocrasie.] Peculiar in constitution.

IDIOCY. n. f. [ἰδιωκία.] Want of understanding.

I stand not upon their idiocy in thinking that horses did eat their bits. Bacon's Holy War.

IDIOM. n. f. [idiome, French; ἰδιωμα.] A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them; wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours. Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach,
And to just idioms fix our doubtful speech. Prior.

IDIOMATICAL. adj. [from idiom.] Peculiar to a tongue; IDIOMATICK. adj. phraseological.

Since phrases used in conversation contract meanness by passing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idiomatick ways of speaking. Spectator.

IDIOPATHY. n. f. [idiopathie, Fr. ἰδιόπαθος and πάθος.] A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Quint.

IDIOSYNCRASY. n. f. [idiosynocrasie, Fr. ἰδιόσυγκρasis, and κράσις.] A peculiar temper or disposition not common to another. Quint.

Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, do innocently feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies, as well as other faculties. Gian. Scyth. c. 15.

IDIOI. n. f. [idiote, Fr. idiota, Latin; ἰδιώτης.] A fool; a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reason.

Life is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing. Shakspere's Macbeth.

What else doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble suppliants that he holds them idiots, or base wretches, not able to get relief? R. Leigh's Essay.

By idle boys and idiots vilify'd,
Who me and my calamities deride. Sandys.

Many idiots will believe that they see what they only hear. Dennis.

IDIOSM. n. f. [idiosme, French; ἰδιωσμός.]

1. Peculiarity of expression; mode of expression peculiar to a language.

Scholars sometimes in common speech, or writing, in their native language, give terminations and idiosms suitable to their native language unto words newly invented. Hale.

2. Folly; natural imbecility of mind.

IDLE. adj. [idol, Saxon.]

1. Lazy; averse from labour.

For shame, so much to do, and yet idle. Pull.

2. Not busy; at leisure.

For often have you writ to her; and she in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shak.

3. Unactive; not employed.

No war or battle's found
Was heard the world around,

The idle spear and shield were high up hung. Milton.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that, in the fury of a tempest, will rather perish than work for their preservation; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

They astonish'd, all resistance lost,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threatening France, plac'd like a painted Jove, Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

I DO

- He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shaksp. King Lear.
6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.
This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.
- They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needless innovations are oppos'd with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker, b. ii.
- His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt, Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
- An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.
- How ill he wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions. Rogers's Sermons.
- TO IDLE, v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.
Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.
- IDLEHEADED, adj. [idle and head.] Foolish; unreasonable.
These idle-headed seekers resorted thither. Carew.
- Upon this loss the fell idle-headed, and to this very day stands near the place still. L'Estrange.
- IDLENESS, n. f. [from idle.]
1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.
Nor is excess the only thing by which sin mauls and breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves thereby; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. Saul's Sermon.
2. Absence of employment.
All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney, b. ii.
- To the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness. Shaksp. Henry IV.
- He fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill. Dryden's Ovid.
- Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.
3. Omission of business.
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
4. Unimportance; trivialness.
5. Inefficacy; uselessness.
6. Barrenness; worthlessness.
7. Unreasonableness; want of judgment; foolishness; madness.
There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain. Bacon's War with Spain.
- IDLER, n. f. [from idle.] A lazy person; a sluggard.
Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service as that they know not the name of a rope. Raleigh.
- Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave. Irene.
- IDLY, adv. [from idle.]
1. Lazily; without employment.
I will flay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shaksp. Henry VI.
2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.
And modern Aëgil, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.
3. Carelessly; without attention.
This from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false, I know not. Shaksp. K. John.
- But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.
4. Ineffectually; vainly.
Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.
- IDOL, n. f. [idole, French; idolum, Latin.]
1. An image worshipped as God.
They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac. i. 59.
- A nation from one faithful man to spring,
Him on this side Euphrates yet residing,
Bred up in idol worship. Milton's Parad. Lost.
- The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.
2. A counterfeit.
Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zech. ii. 17.

JEA

3. An image.
Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.
4. A representation.
Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Fairy Q.
5. One loved or honoured to adoration.
He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldiers good, and people's idol. Denham's Sophy.
- IDOLATER, n. f. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Latin.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.
The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no success; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion.
An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bentley's Sermons.
- TO IDOLATRIZE, v. a. [from idolater.] To worship idols. Alif.
- IDOLATROUS, adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.
Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Peacocks Drawing.
- IDOLATROUSLY, adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.
Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.
- IDOLATRY, n. f. [idolatrie, Fr. idolatria, Lat.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And, were there fence in his idolatry,
My substance should be staid in thy stead. Shaksp. Henry IV.
- Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way wholly unfit to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances. Sent's Sermon.
- The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison's Spectator.
- IDOLIST, n. f. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.
I to God have brought Dissonance, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idols and theists. Milton's Agonist.
- TO IDOLIZE, v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.
Those who are generous, humble, just and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize. Denham.
- Parties, with the greatest violation of Christian unity, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Deacy of Priety.
- IDONEOUS, adj. [idoneus, Latin.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.
You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.
- An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure & facto, and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person. Ayliff.
- IDYL, n. f. [ιδύλλιον; idyllium, Latin.] A small short poem.
I. E. for id est, or that is.
That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Lact.
- JEALOUS, adj. [jaloux, French.]
1. Suspicious in love.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shaksp. King Lear.
- Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd: look to't. Shak. Othello.
- Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
- A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryd. Aureng.
2. Emulous; full of competition.
I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.
3. Zealously

JEJ

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.
I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts. 1 Kings.
4. Suspiciously vigilant.
I am jealous over you with godly jealousy. 2 Cor. ii. 2.
- I am apprehensive, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it, or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him. Clarendon, b. viii.
5. Suspiciously careful.
Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon's Henry VII.
- They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar Protelling false supremacy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
- How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own reputation, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other mens. Dec. of Priety.
6. Suspiciously fearful.
I is doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys our peace. Waller.
- While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.
- JEALOUSLY, adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.
JEALOUSNESS, n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.
Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousy of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. King Charles.
- JEALOUSY, n. f. [jaloussie, French, from jealous.]
1. Suspicion in love.
But gnawing jealousy, out of their sight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Fairy Queen.
- The sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealousy man. Shaksp. Henry IV.
- How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embraces'd despair;
And thund'ring fears, and green-ey'd jealousy!
O love, be moderate; ally thy extasy. Shaksp. Henry IV.
- Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needles jealousy? Shaksp. Cymbeline.
- Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.
2. Suspicious fear.
The obsequy in Essex, in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Clarendon.
3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.
TO JEER, v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.
The merry world did on a day,
With his trainbands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.
- Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talkings, and jeering, which are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
- TO JEER, v. a. To treat with scoffs.
My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jeered. Howel's England's Tears.
- JEER, n. f. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout; jibe; mock.
Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,
Had lost his art, and kept his ears. Swift.
- They tip the forehead in a jeer,
As who should say—she wants it here;
She may be handsome, young and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.
- JEERER, n. f. [from jeer.] A coffer; a corner; a mocker.
JEERINGLY, adj. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuously; in mock; in scoff.
He jeeringly demandeth, whether the sonorous rays are reflected? Derham's Physico-Theology.
- JEGGET, n. f. A kind of sausage.
JEHOVAH, n. f. [יהוה] The proper name of God in the Hebrew language. Anguorth.
- JEJUNE, adj. [jejunus, Latin.]
1. Wanting; empty; vacant.
Gold is the only substance which hath nothing in it volatile, and yet melteth without much difficulty: the melting sweth that it is not jejune, or scarce in spirit. Bacon.
2. Hungry; not satiated.
In gross and turbid streams there might be contained nutriment, and not jejune or limpid water. Brown's Vulgar Err.
3. Dry; unaffection.
You may look upon an inquiry made up of meer narratives, as somewhat jejune. Boyle.
- JEJUNENESS, n. f. [from jejune.]
1. Penury; poverty.
There are three causes of fixation: the even spreading both

JES

- parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits. Bacon's Natural History.
2. Dryness; want of matter that can engage the attention.
JELLED, adj. [See GELLY.] Glutinous; brought to a state of viscosity.
The kifs that tips
The jell'd philtre of her lips. Cleaveland.
- JELLY, n. f. [gelatinum, Latin. See GELLY, which is the proper orthography.]
1. Any thing brought to a state of glutinousness and viscosity.
They, distill'd
Almost to jelly with th' effect of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. Shaksp. Hamlet.
2. Sweetmeat made by boiling sugar in the jelly.
The desert came on, and jell'd brought.
That jelly's rich, this malmsey healing;
Pray dip your whiskers. Pope's Sat. of Horace.
- JENNETING, n. f. [corrupted from Juneting, an apple ripe in June.] A species of apple soon ripe, and of a pleasant taste. Martimer's Husbandry.
- JENNET, n. f. [See GENNET.] A Spanish horse.
The Spanish horse presents a jenet,
To shew his love. Prior.
- TO JEOPARD, v. a. [See JEOPARDY.] To hazard; to put in danger. Obsolete.
He had been accused of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 2 Mac. xiv. 38.
- JEOPARDOUS, adj. [from jeopard.] Hazardous; dangerous.
JEOPARDY, n. f. [This word is supposed to be derived from j'ai perdu, or jea perdu. Skinner and Junius.] Hazard; danger; peril. A word not now in use.
And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventure's chancelful jeopardy. Hubbard's Tale.
- Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shaksp. K. John.
- This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.
- TO JERK, v. a. [gepeccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written jerk.
I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shaksp. Othello.
- Batlings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.
- TO JERK, v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.
Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.
- JERK, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A smart quick lash.
Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonry; and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glanv.
- It is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.
2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.
Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
- Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.
- JERKEN, n. f. [ejnkelin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.
A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shak.
- Mistress Line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin. Shak. of Lear's Tempest.
- Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins, and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of the sheep? More's Antidote against Atheism.
- Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor fustian jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. Sent's Sermons.
- Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a jerkin. Hudibras, p. ii.
- I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliver's Travels.
- JERKIN, n. f. A kind of hawk. Alfred's Worth. This should be written gyrkin.
- JERSEY, n. f. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.
- JESS, n. f. [gelle, French; gette, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which the is held on the fist. Hanner.

JET

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jests were her dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakespeare's Othello.
JE'SSAMINE. n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.
Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jeffamines. Spenser.
JERUSALEM Artichokes. n. f. Sunflower, of which they are a species.
Jernsalem artichokes are increased by small off-sets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To JEST. v. n. [gesticular, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or actions.
Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced.
Ecclij. viii. 4.
Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these several councils. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
JEST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.
But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.
As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon's Essays.
No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Tillotson's Sermons.
He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.
2. The object of jests; laughing-stock.
If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me;
then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shak. Mer. IV. of Windsor.
3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.
That high All-fer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare. R. III.
When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew's Cosmog.
JESTER. n. f. [from jest.]
1. One given to merriment and pranks:
The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
2. One given to sarcasm.
Now, as a jest, I accost you,
Which never yet one friend has lost you. Swift.
3. Buffoon; jackpudding.
Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.
JET. n. f. [gazar, Saxon; jet, Dutch; gagates, Latin.]
1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in mines, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. The ancients recommend jet in medicine; but it is now used only in toys. It is confounder with cannel-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.
Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a jet
Of seed-pearl, ere the bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.
One of us in glass is jet,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.
Under flowing jet,
Of sunny ringlets, or of circling brown,
The neck slight shaded. Thomson's Summer.
2. [Jet, French.] A spout or shoot of water.
Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end.
Blackmore's Creation.
Thus the small jets, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.
3. A yard. Obsolete.
What orchard unrobbed escapes?
Or pullet dare walk in their jet. Tusser's Husbandry.
To JET. v. n. [jeter, French.]
1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.
Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakespeare. Tit. Andr.

JEW

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.
Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
3. To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, French.]
Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. H. Mem.
JETSAM. n. f. [jeter, French.] Goods or other things JETSON. n. f. which, having been cast over board in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bailey.
JETTY. adj. [from jet.]
1. Made of jet.
2. Black as jet.
The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagafcar, are of a jetty black. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.
Nigra black, and Merdamente brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow'rs below. Pope's Dunciad.
JEWELL. n. f. [jyauz, French; jewelen, Dutch.]
1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.
Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shakespeare.
They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakespeare.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. Saib.
2. A precious stone; a gem.
Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
Proud fame's imperial feat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.
3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.
Bid farewell to your sisters.
—Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakespeare's King Lear.
JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. f. The place where the regal ornaments are deposited.
The king has made him
Master of the jewel-house. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
JEWELLER. n. f. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.
These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.
The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.
I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.
JEW'S-EARS. n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear.
Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously-hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides are undulated, and in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in ridges like those of the human ear. Its substance is tough like leather, and its colour very dark. It is light when dry, of a disagreeable smell and nauseous taste. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees, especially where they are decaying. It is not much used by physicians; but the common people cure themselves of sore throats with a de-coction of it in milk. Hill's Bot. Med.
An herb called jew's-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes ashen: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon's Natural History.
JEW'S-MALLOW. n. f. [cercorinus, Latin.]
The leaves are produced alternately at the joints of the stalks: the flower has five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the point of the flower becomes a cylindrical fruit, divided into five cells, filled with angular seeds. Ravenscroft says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Milner.
JEW'S-STONE. n. f. An extraneous fossil, being the cla-vated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, perissified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end; generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky redness.
It is found in Syria, lodged in a loose sandy stone, or a mass very hard earth. It is diuretick; but has been falsely recommended as a lithontripick. Hill's Nat. Med.
JEW'S-HARP. n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring

IGN

spring of iron, which, being struck by the hand, plays against the breath. Is. conjunctio. [gyp, Saxon.]
1. Suppose that; allowing that. A hypothetical particle.
Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs or ands. Hooker, Preface.
If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
—If! talk't thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shak.
This feeling of all things, because we can desire to see all things, he makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.
This is only an infallibility upon supposition, which amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false.
Tillotson's Sermons, Preface.
All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxim to be good; if so be there were no refutrec-tion. Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.
Tisiphone, that oft hast heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope's Statius.
2. Whether or no.
Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
But by this easy rife they all advance.
She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't—it may be—and it must;
To which of these must Alma trust?
Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if she doubts or no. Prior.
3. Though I doubt whether; suppose it be granted that.
Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.
IGNEOUS. adj. [igneus, Latin.] Firy; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.
That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glanv. Scip. c. 2c.
IGNIPOTENT. adj. [ignis and potens, Latin.] Presiding over fire. Pope's Homer.
IGNIS FATUUS. n. f. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern.
Vapours arising from putrified waters are usually called ignes fatui. Newton's Opt.
To IGNITE. v. a. [from ignis, fire, Latin.] To kindle; to set on fire.
Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew's Microscop.
IGNITION. n. f. [ignition, French, from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.
The laborant fired the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be perfectly communicated. Boyle.
Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Rap.
IGNITIBLE. adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire.
Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur or ignitable parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shakespeare. II. IV.
Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspires.
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.
Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.
IGNORAMUS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest im-pannelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they dislike their evidence as defective, or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther inquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Cowel.
2. A foolish fellow; a vain uninstruced pretender. A low word.
Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world, and he shall readily admit the commendation. South's Sermons.
IGNORANCE. n. f. [ignorance, French; ignoratio, Latin.]
1. Want of knowledge; unskilfulness.
If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker, b. v.
Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakespeare.
Still banish your defenders, 'till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
If he have power,
Then veil your ignorance; if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?
From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wife! Prior.
2. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.
Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. C. Pray.
Punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tob. iii. 2.
IGNORANT. adj. [ignorant, French; ignorans, Latin.]
1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unenlightened.
So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Pf. lxxiii. 22.
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Asaeth.
In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson's Sermons.
Fools grant what'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.
2. Unknown; undiscovered.
If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge Thereof to be inform'd, imprisou't not In ignorant concealment. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
3. Without knowledge of some particular.
Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon's Essays.
O visions ill foreseen! Better had I Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.
Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.
5. Ignorantly made or done.
H's shipping,
Poor ignorant bantles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakespeare.
IGNORANT. n. f. One untaught, unlettered, uninstructed.
Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorants to preach!
IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge;
unskilfully; without information.
The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorant save. Dryden.
When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably,

ILE

mirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.
TO IGNORE. v. a. [ignorere, French; ignore, Latin.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.
I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts, by me alleged Boyle.
 Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.
IGNOSCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.] Capable of pardon.
JIG. n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teutonic, a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.
 When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike music, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland.
 As fiddlers still,
 Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne.
 Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig given times,
 To countenance a legitimate poem. Ben. Jonson.
 All the swains that there abide,
 With jigs and rural dance reformed. Milton.
 The muses blushed to see their friends exalting
 Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting. Pentem.
 They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminsterhall. Arbutnot.
 Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
 Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.
TO JIG. v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelessly; to dance.
 Expressed in contempt.
 As for the jiggling part and figures of dances, I count that little. Locke.
JIG-MAKER. n. f. [jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.
 Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry?
Shakespeare's Hamlet.
JIGGUMBO. n. f. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack;
 a slight contrivance in machinery.
 He rifled all his pokes and fobs
 Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudibras, p. iii.
JILT. n. f. [gilta, Icelandic, to intrap in an amour. Mr. Lye.
 Perhaps from gilet, by contraction; or gillet, or gillet, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name for a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland.]
 1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.
 Avoid both courts and camps,
 Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
 With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
 To throw herself away on fools. Orway's Orphan.
 2. A name of contempt for a woman.
 When love was all an easy monarch's care,
 Jilts rul'd the state, and statemen farces writ. Pope.
TO JILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.
 Tell who loves who;
 And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistresses, and it is ten to one but three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.
 She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,
 Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.
TO JINGLE. v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the found intended to be expressed.] To clink; to found correspondently.
 What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shak.
 With noises
 Of roaring, shrieking, howlings, jingling chains,
 We were awak'd. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
 And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.
 What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
 In founts and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.
JINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Correspondent sounds.
 Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
 2. Any thing founding; a rattle; a bell.
 If you plant where favages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon's Essays.
ILE. n. f. [corrupted from aisle, French.] A walk or alley in a church or public building. Properly aisle.
 Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
 And arches widen, and long ile extend. Pope.
ILE. n. f. [aile, French.] An ear of corn. Ainsworth.
ILEUS. n. f. [Latin.]

called the twisting of the guts; but is really either a circum-volution, or inflection of one part of the gut within the other.
Arbutnot on Diet.
ILLEX. n. f. [Latin.]
 The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a fort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chamberlotted, as if it were painted, and is useful for stocks of tools, mallet-heads, chairs, axle-trees, wedges, beetles, pins, and palliades for fortifications, being very hard and durable. Martiner.
ILIAC. adj. [iliacus, Latin.] Relating to the lower bowels.
 The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.
 Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled. Flayer on the Humours.
ILIAC PASSION. n. f. A kind of nervous cholick, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above;
 whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.
ILK. adv. [ealc, Saxon.] Eke; also. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each: as, ilk one of you, every one of you. It also signifies the same; as, Mauchie of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same.
 Shepherds, should it not yfend
 Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verbe
 Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
 That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse. Spenser.
ILL. adj. [contracted from EVIL, and retaining all its senses.]
 1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.
 There's some ill planet reigns;
 I must be patient, 'till the heavens look
 With an aspect more favourable. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

 The clergy ill example. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill seat; but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours. Bacon's Essays.
 Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed: others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry.
 2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.
 You with me health in very happy season;
 For I am on the sudden something ill. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governors falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.
ILL. n. f.
 1. Wickedness.
 Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.
 Young men to imitate all ill are prone;
 But are compell'd to avarice alone:
 For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
 Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden's Aureng.
 2. Misfortune; misery.
 Who can all sense of others ill escape,
 Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate's Juvenal.
 Though plung'd in ill and exercis'd in care,
 Yet never let the noble mind despair;
 When prest by dangers, and beset with foes,
 The gods their timely succour interpose;
 And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
 By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Philippi.
ILL. adv.
 1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.
 Ill at ease, both he and all her train
 The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.
 2. Not easily.
 Thou desirest
 The punishment all on thyself! alas!
 Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain
 His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
 And my displeasure bear'st so ill. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate. Dryden.
 When just approaching to the nuptial state,
 Ill, substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.

 lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisd. xviii. 10.
 My colleague,
 Being so ill affected with the gout,
 Will not be able to be there in person. Ben. Jonsp. Catil.
 The danger of the day's but newly gone,
 And the examples
 Of every minute's instance, present now,
 Have put us in these ill becoming arms. Shaksp. H. IV.
 Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:
 I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
 Of Vertigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryd. K. Arthur.
 We simple toasters take delight
 To see our women's teeth look white;
 And every faucy ill bred fellow
 Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.
 The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows
 her. Sidney, b. ii.
 Envy, how carefully does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned? It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits.
Collier on Envy.
 There grows,
 In my most ill compos'd affection, such
 A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
 I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shaksp. Macb.
 To what end this ill concerted lye,
 Palpable and gross? Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Addison on the War.

 With antick vests, which, through their shady fold,
 Betray the freaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryd. Virg. Geor.
 You shall not find me, daughter,
 After the slander of most step-mothers,
 Ill eyed unto you. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 I see thy sister's tears,
 Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
 In the pursuit of our ill fated loves.
 Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
 Their tedious life. Prior.
 Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.
 Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.
 Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unkindly errand. Sidney, b. ii.
 O, what a world of vile ill favour'd faults
 Look handsome in three hundred pounds a year! Shaksp.

 with his ill ordered choice. Locke.
 When you expose the scene,
 Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
 Off fly the vizards. Swift.
 For Phthia fix'd is my return;
 Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
 Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn. Dryden.
 There motly images her fancy strike,
 Figures ill pair'd, and similes unlike. Pope's Dunciad.
 Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
 Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.
 I shall direct you better, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had more opportunities than many others to observe what sources the follies of women are derived from. Swift.
 Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the conſi-deration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished portion. Locke.
 Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
 Her thoughts inventive on the bridal day;
 The conscious fire the dawning blush survey'd,
 And smiling thus bespoke the blooming maid. Pope's Odyssey.
 Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain:
 As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
 So many years is she condemn'd by fate. Dryden.
 The god inform'd
 This ill shap'd body with a daring foul. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

ILLIMITED. adj. [in and limer, Latin; illimité, French.] Unbounded; interminable.
ILLIMITEDNESS. n. f. [from illimited.] Exemption from all bounds.
 The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clerendon, b. viii.
ILLITERATE. adj. [illiteratus, Latin.] Unlettered; untaught; unlearned; unenlightened by science.
 The duke was illiterate, yet had learnt at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of experience. Watts.
 Th' illiterate writer, empiric like, applies
 To minds diseas'd unsafe chance remedies:
 The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began,
 Studies with care th' anatomy of man;
 Sees virtue, vice, and passions in their cause,
 And fame from science, not from fortune draws. Dryden.
 In the first ages of Christianity not only the learned and the wise, but the ignorant and illiterate embraced torments and death. Tillotson's Sermons.
ILLITERATENESS. n. f. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.
 Many acquainted with chymistry but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impostures of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Boyle.
ILLITERATURE. n. f. [in and literature.] Want of learning.
 The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterature, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion. Ayliffe's Pervigil.
ILLNESS. n. f. [from ill.]
 1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.
 He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doois set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.
 2. Sickness; malady; disorder of health.
 On the Lord's day, which immediately preceded this illness, he had received the sacrament. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Since the account her majesty received of the intemperate behaviour of the faction, during her late illness at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of all power to do mischief. Swift.
 3. Wickedness.
 Thou would be great;
 Art not without ambition; but without
 The illness should attend it. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
ILLNATURE. n. f. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.
Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and four and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that befalls another, and of an utter insensibility of any kindness done him. South's Sermons.
ILLNATURED. adj. [from illnature.]
 1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or goodwill; mischievous.
 These ill qualities denominate a person illnature'd, they being such as make him grievous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South's Sermons.
 Stay, silly bird, th' illnature'd task refuse;
 Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news. Addison's Occid.
 It might be one of those illnature'd beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with groundless terrors. Atterbury's Sermons.
 2. Phillips applies it to land. Untractable; not yielding to culture.
 The fondly studious of increase,
 Rich foreign mold on their illnature'd land Induce. Philips.
ILLNATUREDLY. adv. [from illnature'd.] In a peevish, forward manner.
ILLNATUREDDNESS. n. f. [from illnature'd.] Want of a kindly disposition.
ILLOGICAL. adj. [in and logical.]
 1. Ignorant or negligent of the rules of reasoning.
 One of the dissenters appeared to Dr. Sanderlin so bold and illogical in the dispute, as forced him to say he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities. Watts.
 2. Contrary to the rules of reason.
 Reason cannot dispute and make an inference so utterly illogical. Decay of Piety.
ILLOGICALLY. adv. [from illogical.] In a manner contrary to the laws of argument.

ILL

To ILLUDE. v. a. [illudo, Latin.] To deceive; to mock; to impose on; to play upon; to torment by some contemptuous artifice of mockery.
 Sometimes athwart, sometimes he brook him strait,
 And fals'd of this blow, t' illude him with such bait. F. Qu.
 In vain we measure this amazing sphere,
 While its circumference, seeming to be brought Ev'n into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd thought. Pri.
ILLUME. v. a. [illuminare, French.]
 1. To enlighten; to illuminate.
 When yon fame star, that's westward from the pole,
 Had made his course t' illuminate that part of heav'n,
 Where now it burns. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
 2. To brighten; to adorn.
 The mountain's brow,
 Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach
 Betoken. Thomson's Summer.
ILLUMINE. v. a. [illuminare, French.]
 1. To enlighten; to supply with light.
 To confirm his words, out flew
 Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
 Of mighty cherubims: the sudden blaze
 Far round illumine'd hell. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
 What in me is dark,
 Illumine! what is low, raise and support! Milt. Par. Lost.
 2. To decorate; to adorn.
 To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line;
 O let my country's friends illumine mine. Pope.
ILLUMINATE. v. a. [illuminare, French; lumen, Latin.]
 1. To enlighten; to supply with light.
 Do thou vouchsafe, with thy love-kindling light,
 T' illuminate my dim and dull'd eye.
 No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light. Spenser.
 He made the stars,
 And set them in the firmament of heav'n,
 T' illuminate the earth and rule the night. Milt. Par. Lost.
 Reason our guide, what can she more reply
 Than that the sun illuminates the sky;
 Than that night rises from his absent ray,
 And his returning lustre kindles day? Pri.
 2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.
 3. To enlighten intellectually with knowledge or grace.
 Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated world with his impostures. Sand's Travels.
 When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural. Locke.
 4. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.
 5. To illustrate.
 My health is insufficient to amplify these remarks, and to illuminate the several pages with variety of examples. Watts.
ILLUMINATION. n. f. [illuminatio, Lat. illumination, Fr. from illuminate.]
 1. The act of supplying with light.
 2. That which gives light.
 The sun is but a body illightened, and an illumination created. Ralegh's History of the World.
 3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.
 Flow'rs are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd,
 And windows with illuminations grac'd. Dryden's Pers.
 4. Brightness; splendour.
 The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton on the City of London.
 5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge or grace.
 Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, or by prophetic illumination are inspired. Hosier.
 We have forms of prayers imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours, and the turning them into good and holy uses. Bacon.
 No holy passion, no illumination, no inspiration, can be now a sufficient commission to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace. Spratt's Sermons.
ILLUMINATIVE. adj. [illuminativus, Fr. from illuminate.] Having the power to give light.
 What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire: what admits the illuminative action of fire, and is not seen, is called air. Digby in Bacon's.
ILLUMINATOR. n. f. [from illuminate.]
 1. One who gives light.
 2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.
Illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton.
ILLUSION. n. f. [illusio, Latin; illusion, Fr.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.
 That, dissolv'd by magic flights,
 Shall raise such artificial sights,
 As, by the strength of their illusion,
 Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

IMA

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion. Bacon's Henry VII.
 So oft they fell
 Into the same illusion; not as man, Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illusion. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their title to salvation. Roger's Sermons.
 To dream once more I close my willing eyes;
 Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise! Pope.
 We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope.
ILLUSIVE. adj. [from illusio, Latin.] Deceiving by false show.
 The heathen bards, who idle fables dress,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms express. Blackmore.
 While the fond soul,
 Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
 Still paints th' illusive form. Thomson's Spring.
ILLUSORY. adj. [from in and lusorius, Latin; illusoire, Fr.] Deceiving; fraudulent.
 Subtly, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke.
ILLUSTRATE. v. n. [illustrare, Latin; illustrer, Fr.]
 1. To brighten with light.
 2. To brighten with honour.
 Matter to me of glory! whom their hate
Illustrates, when they see all regal pow'r Giv'n me to quell their pride. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Thee she enroll'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list. Phillips.
 3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.
 They take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or really false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
ILLUSTRATION. n. f. [illustration, Fr. from illustrate.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition.
 Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L'strange.
 Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke.
ILLUSTRATIVE. adj. [from illustrate.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.
 They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people. Brown.
ILLUSTRATIVELY. adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.
 Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
ILLUSTRIOUS. adj. [illustris, Latin; illustre, Fr.] Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.
 In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred. South's Sermons.
 Of ev'ry nation, each illustrious name,
 Such toys as those have cheated into fame. Dryden's Juven.
ILLUSTRIOSLY. adv. [from illustrious.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.
 He disdain'd not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest his charity. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Enjoy the glory to be great no more;
 And carrying with you all the world can boast,
 To all the world illustriously are lost. Pope's Spring.
ILLUSTRIOSNESS. n. f. [from illustrious.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.
IM. Contracted from I am.
IM is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters.
IMAGE. n. f. [image, French; imago, Latin.]
 1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.
 Whose is this image and superscription? Mat. xxii. 20.
 The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, ever more talking. Shakspeare.
 Thy brother I,
 Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shakspeare, Tit. And.
 The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South's Sermons.
 Still must I be upbraided with your line;
 But your late brother did not prize me less,
 Because I could not boast of image. Dryden, Triclin. Love.
 2. An idol; a false god.
 3. A copy; representation; likeness.
 Long may't thou live,
 To bear his image and renew his glories! Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
 I have

I M A

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images;
But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shaksp. R. III.
The image of the jest
I'll shew you here at large. Shaksp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
He made us to his image all agree;
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all night! Merc' fetches,
The images of revolt. Shaksp. King Lear.
This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault Lives in his eye. Shaksp. King John.
The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears. Dryden's Æn.
5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.
Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.
When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.
To IMAGINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy;
to imagine.
How are immaterial substances to be imag'd, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.
Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Phillips.
His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.
If fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

IMAGERY. n. f. [from image.]
1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.
Of marble stone was cut
An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery. Fairy Queen.
When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraits, and imagery;
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. Show; appearance.
What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior.
All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.
Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.
3. Copies of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.
It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury's Sermons.
4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.
I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMAGINABLE. adj. [imaginabl, Fr. from imaginer.] Possible to be conceived.
It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South's Sermons.
Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson's Sermons.

IMAGINANT. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining; forming ideas.
We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMAGINARY. adj. [imaginaire, French, from imaginer.]
1. Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.
False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shaksp.
Expectation whirls me round:
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History of the World.
Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison's Cato.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French, from imaginer.]
1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

I M B

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.
Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glauco. Scept.
O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The fight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton's Agonist.
His imagination were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.
2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.
Sometimes despair darkens all her imagination; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sid.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imagination,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp. R. III.
Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imagination, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shaksp. King Lear.
We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself leads us. Locke.

3. Contrivance; scheme.
Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imagina- tions against me. Lam. iii. 60.
IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, Fr. from imaginer.] Fantastick;
full of imagination.
Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon's Natural History.
Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastic part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMAGINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginor, Latin.]
1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.
Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shaksp. Lear.
Present feats
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shaksp. Macbeth.
What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive.
They intended evil against thee, they imagined a milchie-vous device. Pf. xxi. 11.

IMAGINER. n. f. [from imaginer.] One who forms ideas.
The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the act think. Bacon's Natural History.

IMBECILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecilli, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.
To IMBECILE. v. a. [from the adjective.] This word is corruptly written embezzle. To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.
Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecillité, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.
A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker, b. iv.
No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.
We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.
That way we are contented to prove, which, being the work in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brook'd. Hooker.
Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shaksp. Lear.
Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.
When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibe, Latin; imbibere, French.]
1. To drink in; to draw in.
A pot of adze will receive more hot water than cold, for-asmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.
The torrent mercilefs imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Scott.

I M B

Illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the fun. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.
Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.
It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.
Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
3. To drench; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in the English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.
Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbued with more acid, becomes a metallic salt. Newton.

IMBIBER. n. f. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.
Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams. Arbutnot.

IMBIBITION. n. f. [imbibition, French, from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.
Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madafation there is required an imbibition. Bacon's Natural History.
A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]
1. To make bitter.
2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.
Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison's Freeholder.
Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame? South's Sermons.

3. To exasperate.
To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from body.]
1. To condense to a body.
2. To invest with matter.
An opening cloud reveals
An heav'nly form imbod'd, and array'd Dryden.
With robes of light.
Though affluity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialised spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glauco. Scept.

3. To bring together into one mass or company.
I by vow am so embodied yours,
That the which marries you must marry me. Shaksp. Lear.
Never less created, man
Met such imbodied force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Under their head embod'd all in one. Mil. Par. Lost.
Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops embodied, from the Sabine land. Dryden's Æn.

4. To inclose. Improper.
In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBOLDEN. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.
The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.
The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbodies and run into one. Locke.

To IMBOLL. v. n. [from boil.] To exultate; to effervesce;
to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron.
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imbolling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.
'Tis necessary he should die:
Nothing imbaldens sin so much as mercy. Shak. Timon.
I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imbalden'd me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
I was the more imbalden'd, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.
Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Imbalden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden's Æn.
Their virtues and superior genius imbalden'd them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms, Swift.

I M B

To IMBOSOM. v. a. [from bosom.]
1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.
The Father infinite,
By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the son. Milton's Par. Lost.
Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by furling columus mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.
But glad desire, his late embosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of fight he nurs'd. Sidney.
Who glad t' embosom his affection vile,
Did all the might, more plainly to appear. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOWND. v. a. [from bound.] To inclose; to shut in.
That sweet breath,
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay. Shak. K. John.

To IMBOW. v. a. [from bow.] To arch; to vault.
Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond fure, Imbowed with gold and gorgeous ornament. Fairy Queen.
Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference:
they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.
Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar mally proof. Milton.

IMBOWMENT. n. f. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.
The roof all open, not so much as any embowment near any of the walls left. Bacon's Natural History.

To IMBOWER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower;
to shelter with trees.

In spotless peace retir'd. Thomson.

To IMBRANGLE. v. a. To intangle. A low word.
With subtle cobweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;
In which, when once they are imbrangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras:

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbrex, Latin.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICATION. n. f. [imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.
All is guarded with a well made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBROWN. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken;
to obscure; to cloud.
Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow'r. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry shoe;
The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket ginsling half-pence found. Gay.
Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.
Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRUE. v. a. [from in and brue.]
1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long.
Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.
There streams a spring of blood so fast
From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face
Of that accursed catiff. David's Civil War.
The mercilefs Turks, embrued with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolles's History of the Turks.
At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue. Sandys.
Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood. Addison.
Lo! these hands in murder are imbru'd,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.
These, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar decry'd,
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin sword Ægylthus' veins imbru'd;
The murder fell, and blood atton'd for blood. Pope.
A good man chafes rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood. Clarissa.

Simon sent to Demetrius, to the end he should give the land an immunity, because all that Tryphon did was to spoil. Mac. xiii. 34.
The laity invidiously aggravate the rights and immunities of the clergy. Sprat's Sermons.
3. Freedom.
Common apprehensions entertain the antidotal condition of Ireland, conceiving only in that land an immunity from ve-nomous creatures. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
But this annex'd condition of the crown,
Immunity from errors, you disown. Dryden.
To IMMURE. v. a. [in and murus, Lat. emmure, old French, so that it might be written emmure.] To inclose within walls;
to confine; to shut up; to imprison.
Pity, you ancient stones, these tender babes,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls! Shak. R. III.
One of these three contains her heav'nly picture;
And shall I think in silver she's immur'd? Shakespeare.
At the first descent on shore he was not immur'd with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Hutton.
Lyfimachus immur'd it with a wall. Sandys's Travels.
Though a foul foolish prison her immure
On earth, she, when escap'd, is wife and pure. Denham.
IMMURE. n. f. [from the verb.] A wall; an inclosure, as in Shakespeare.
Their vow is made
To ransom Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps. Shakespeare.

IMMUSICAL.

I M P

IMMUSICAL. adj. [in and musical.] Unmusical; inharmonious.
All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or im-musical, which are ever unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whisperings. Bacon's Natural History.
When we consider the immusical note of all swans we ever beheld or heard of, we cannot consent. Brown.
IMMUTABILITY. n. f. [from immutabilitas, Lat. immutabilitas, Fr.
from immutabile.] Exemption from change; invariableness;
unchangeableness.
The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.
His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God.
Chryse's Phil. Princ.
IMMUTABLE. adj. [from immutabilis, Latin.] Unchangeable;
invariable; unalterable.
By two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we have a strong consolation. Ileb. vi.
Thy threat'nings, Lord, as thine, thou may'st revoke;
But if immutable and fix'd they stand,
Continue still thyself to give the stroke,
And let not foreign foes oppress thy land. Dryden.
IMMUTABLY. adv. [from immutabile.] Unalterably; invariably; unchangeably.
His love is like his essence, immutable eternal. Boyle.
IMP. n. f. [from imp, Welsh, a shoot, a sprout, a frig.]
1. A son; the offspring; progeny.
That noble imp your son. Lord Cromwell to King Henry.
And thou, most dreaded imp of highlest Jove, Fair Venus' son. Fairy Queen, b. i.
The tender imp was weaned from the teat. Fairfax.
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakespeare. Henry V.
2. A subaltern devil; a puny devil. In this sense 'tis still retained.
Such we deny not to be the imps and limbs of Satan. Hook.
Him after long debate, irresolute
Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose,
Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
To enter, and his dark suggestions hide
From sharpest sight. Milt. Paradise Lost, l. ix.
As soon as you can hear his knell,
This god on earth turns d— in hell;
And, lo! his ministers of state,
Transform'd to imps, his levee wait. Swift.
To IMP. v. a. [from imp, to engrave, Welsh.] To lengthen or enlarge with any thing additional.
If thou wilt shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wings. Shak. R. II.
New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.
Help, ye tart satyrs, to imp my rage
With all the scorpions that should whip this age. Cleavel.
With cord and canvas from rich Hamburg sent,
His navy's mott'd wings he imps once more. Dryden.
New creatures rise,
A moving mass at first, and flort of thighs;
'Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,
The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings. Dryden.
The Mercury of heav'n, with silver wings
Imps for the flight, to overtake his ghost. Southern.
To IMPACT. v. a. [from impactus, Latin.] To drive close or hard.
They are angular; but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted to thick and confus'dly together. Woodward on Fossils.
To IMPACT. v. a. [in and point.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.
Never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impact his cause. Shakespeare. H. VI.
To IMPAIR. v. a. [from impar, to make worse, French. Skinners.]
To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence.
To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual. Hooker.
Object divine
Must needs impair, and weary human sense. Milt. Pa. Left.
That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years. Pope.
To IMPAIR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.
Impair. n. f. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease.
A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preferred by fire than dust of steel. Brown.

I M P

IMPAIRMENT. n. f. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.
His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
IMPAIRABLE. adj. [from impairable, Fr. in and pairable.] Not to be perceived by touch.
If beaten into an impairable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.
To IMPAIRADISE. v. a. [from imparadise, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.
This impaired neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney, b. ii.
All my souls be
Impair'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Dante.
Thus these two,
Impair'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.
IMPAIRITY. n. f. [from imparitas, impar, Latin.]
1. Inequality; disproportion.
Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.
2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.
What verity is there in that numerical conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or impar-ity of letters in niens names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To IMPAIRK. v. a. [in and park.] To inclose with a park;
to sever from a common.
To IMPART. v. a. [from impartior, Latin.]
1. To grant; to give.
High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.
2. To communicate.
Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
As in confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.
Thou to me thy thoughts
Wast wont, I mine to thee was wont to impart. Milt. P. L.
I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milt. Par. Left.
IMPARTIAL. adj. [from impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons.
Succeeds I hope, and fate I cannot fear;
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Jeve is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden's Æn.
IMPARTIALITY. [from impartialité, French; from impartial.]
Equitableness; justice.
A pious and well disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside
it. Saunders's Sermons.
IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiased judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.
Since the Scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. Saunders's Sermons.
IMPARTIBLE. adj. [from impartible, Fr. from impart.] Communicable; to be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.
The same body may be conceived to be more or less impar-tible than it is active or heavy. Digby.
IMPASSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.
There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Roderic.
Over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try,
To found a path from hell to that new world. Alfred.
When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts. Tenison.
IMPASSIBILITY. n. f. [from impassibilis, Fr. from impassibilis.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

Two

IMP

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand. Dryden's Æn. Dedicat.
IMPA'SSIBLE. adj. [impassible, Fr. in and passio, Latin.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.
 If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress into a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour. Hammond.
 Secure of death, I should condemn thy dart, Dryden.
 Though naked, and impassible depart.
IMPA'SSIBLENESS. n. f. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.
 How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensibilities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassibility of the next? Decay of Piety.
IMPA'SSIONED. adj. [in and passion.] Seized with passion.
 So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,
 The tempter, all impassion'd, thus began. Milt. Par. Lost.
IMPA'SSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.
 She told him what those empty phantoms were,
 Forms without bodies, and impassive air. Dryden's Æn.
 Pale furs, unfelt at distance, roll away;
 And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play. Pope.
IMPA'STED. adj. [in and paste.] Covered as with paste.
 Horridly trickt
 With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, Bak'd and impass'd with the parching fires. Shaksp. Hamlet.
IMPA'TIENCE. n. f. [impatience, Fr. impatientia, Latin.]
 1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.
 All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience. Shaksp. King Lear.
 The experiment I resolv'd to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience. Temple.
 2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.
 3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.
IMPA'TIENT. adj. [impatient, Fr. impatiens, Latin.]
 1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear.
 Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
 Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.
 2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.
 The tortur'd savage turns around,
 And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound. Dryden.
 3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion.
 To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
 The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him. Addison's Spectator.
 4. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay.
 The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd pow'r. Dry.
 On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands;
 Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands. Pope's Odyssey.
IMPA'TIENTLY. adv. [from impatient.]
 1. Passionately; ardently.
 He considered one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration. Clarendon.
 2. Eagerly; with great desire.
TO IMPA'TRONIZE. v. a. [impatronizer, Fr. in and patronize.]
 To gain to one's self the power of any seignior. This word is not usual.
 The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the dutchy. Bacon's Henry VII.
TO IMPA'WN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.
 Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd
 Some surety for a safe return again. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 Many now in health
 Shall drop their blood, in approbation
 Of what your reverence shall invite us to;
 Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
 How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shaksp. H. V.
TO IMPEACH. v. a. [impeacher, French.]
 1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use.
 Each door he opened without any breach;
 There was no bar to stop, nor foe him to impeach. Fairy Queen.
 These ungracious practices of his sons did impeach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life. Davies.
 If they will impeach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy. Hayward.
 A delusion on my throat impeached my utterance. Howell.
 2. To accuse by public authority.
 They were both impeached by a house of commons. Addison.
 Great dissensions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had impeached. Swift.

IMP

IMPEACH. n. f. [from the verb.] Hindrance; let; impediment.
 Why, what an intricate impeach is this?
 If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;
 If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly. Shaksp. As You Like It.
IMPEACHABLE. adj. [from impeach.] Accusable; chargeable.
 Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable. Grew's Cosmog.
IMPEACHER. n. f. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.
 Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour. Gov. of the Tongue.
IMPEACHMENT. n. f. [from impeach.]
 1. Hindrance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use.
 Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impeachment to the good government thereof. Spenser on Ireland.
 Turn thee back,
 And tell thy king I do not seek him now;
 But could be willing to march on to Calais.
 Without impeachment. Shaksp. Henry V.
 Neither is this accession of necessity any impeachment to Christian liberty, or enjoining of mens consciences. Sandef.
 2. Public accusation; charge preferred.
 The king, provok'd to it by the queen,
 Devis'd impeachments to imprison him. Shak. Rich. III.
 The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impeachment, was instant with them for the prosecution. Addison.
 The consequences of Coriolanus's impeachment had like to have been fatal to his state. Swift.
TO IMPEACH. v. a. [in and pearl.]
 1. To form in resemblance of pearls.
 Innumerable as the stars of night,
 Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
 Impalls on every leaf, and ev'ry flow'r. Milton's Par. Lost.
 2. To decorate as with pearls.
 The dew of the morning impeach'd every thorn, and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth. Digby to Pope.
IMPECCABILITY. n. f. [impeccabilis, Fr. from impeccable.]
 Exemption from sin; exemption from failure.
 Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes. Pope.
IMPECCABLE. adj. [impeccable, French; in and peccare, Latin.] Exempt from possibility of sin.
 That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that was a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his. Hammond on Fundamentals.
TO IMPEDE. v. a. [impedi, Latin.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.
 All the forces are mustered to impede its passage. Decay of Piety.
 The way is open, and no stop to force
 The stars return, or to impede their course. Cretch.
IMPEDEMENT. n. f. [impedimentum, Latin.] Hindrance; let; impediment; obstruction; opposition.
 The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience. Sidney.
 What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them. Hooker.
 The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let. Hooker.
 They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech. Mar. vii. 32.
 But for my tears,
 The moist impediments unto my speech,
 I had foretold this dear and deep rebuke. Shaksp. H. IV.
 May I never
 To this good purpose, that so fairly shews, Dream of impediment. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Free from th' impediments of light and noise,
 Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs. Waller.
 Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom; and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to lose his life with torments. Taylor's Rule of living bet.
TO IMPEL. v. a. [impello, Latin.] To drive on towards a point; to urge forward; to press on.
 So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,
 Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide. Dryden's Ovid.
 The furge impell'd me on a craggy coast. Pope.
 Propitious gales
 Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails. Pope's Odyssey.
 A mightier pow'r the strong direction sends,
 And several men impel to several ends; Pope.
 This drives them constant to a certain coast.
IMPELLENT. n. f. [impellens, Latin.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward. How.

IMP

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impelling and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture. Glanville.
TO IMPEND. v. n. [impendo, Lat.] To hang over; to be at hand; to press nearly.
 It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins, and our lively sense of God's impending wrath. Smalridge's Sermons.

 Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends. Pope's Odyssey.
 No story I unfold of public woes,
 Nor bear advices of impending fates. Pope's Odyssey.
IMPENDENT. adj. [impending, Latin.] Imminent; hanging over; pressing closely.
 If the evil feared or impending be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rides the appetite to averation. Hale.
 Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain
 Place Ormond's duke: impending in the air
 Let his keen fabre, comet-like, appear. Prior.
IMPENDENCE. n. f. [from impend.] The state of hanging over; near approach.
 Though it be good, yet sometimes it is not safe to be attempted, by reason of the impendency of a greater sensible evil. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
IMPERETRABILITY. n. f. [imperetrabilis, Fr. from imperetrare.]
 1. Quality of not being pierceable.
 All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal imperetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton's Opt.
 2. Infusibility of intellectual impression.
IMPERETRABLE. adj. [imperetrabilis, Fr. imperetrabilis, Lat.]
 1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.
 With hard'ning cold, and forming heat,
 The cyclops did their strokes repeat,
 Before th' imperetrable shield was wrought. Dryden.
 2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.
 Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Imperetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden.
 The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross things, thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them, and are thought to be wrapped up in imperetrable obscurity. Locke.
 3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.
 4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.
 It is the most imperetrable cur
 That ever kept with men.
 —Let him alone;
 I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers. Shaksp. As You Like It.
 Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but imperetrable by a sermon of the gospel. Taylor.
IMPERETRABLY. adv. [from imperetrabilis.] With hardness to a degree incapable of impression.
 Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull
 Of solid proof, imperetrably dull. Pope's Dunciad.

 Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence. South's Sermons.
 Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life. Tillotson's Sermons.
 He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, till at last he becomes hardened without remorse. Rogers's Sermons.
IMPENITENT. adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.
 Our Lord in anger hath granted some impenitent mens requests; as, on the other side, the apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted. Hooker.
 They dy'd
Impenitent, and left a race behind
 Like to themselves. Milton.
 When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impossible but the mind of man should with for the one, and have dislikes to the other. Hammond.
IMPENITENTLY. adv. [from impenitent.] Obdurately; without repentance.
 The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not willfully, and impenitently lived and died in. Hammond.
 In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
 Still run on poets! Pope.
IMPERVIOUS. adj. [in and pervia, Latin.] Wanting wings.
 It is generally received an earwigg hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impenvious insects; but he that shall with a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies. Brown.

IMP

IMPERATE. adj. [imperatus, Latin.] Done with consciousness; done by direction of the mind.
 The elicit internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external imperate acts of the same habit utterly cease. South's Sermons.
 Those natural and involuntary actions are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those imperate acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
IMPERATIVE. adj. [imperativus, Fr. imperativus, Latin.] Commanding; expressive of command.
 The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, intreating; which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
IMPERCEPTIBLE. adj. [imperceptible, Fr. in and perceptible.]
 Not to be discovered; not to be perceived; small; subtle; quick or slow so as to elude observation.
 Some things are in their nature imperceptible by our sense; yea, and the more refined parts of material existence, which, by reason of their subtlety, escape our perception. Hale.
 In the sudden changes of his subject with almost imperceptible connections, the Arabian poet is his master. Dryden.
 The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, or the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost imperceptible to the touch, and even. Dryden.
 The alterations in the globe are very slight, and almost imperceptible, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth. Wood.
IMPERCEPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from imperceptible.] The quality of eluding observation.
 Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtlety and imperceptibility to us, are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.
IMPERCEPTIBLY. adv. [from imperceptible.] In a manner not to be perceived.
 Upon reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself imperceptibly, we are taught by surprize, and become wiser and better unawares. Add.
IMPERFECT. adj. [imperfectus, Fr. imperfectus, Latin.]
 1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Used either of persons or things.
 Something he left imperfect in the state,
 Which, since his coming forth, is thought of,
 Which brought the kingdom so much fear and danger,
 That his return was most required. Shaksp.
 Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination; but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben. Johnson.
 The middle action, which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly called, by some of the ancients, iniquation or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.
 The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.
 There are divers things we agree to be knowledge by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.
 A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an intire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Harvey on Consumptions.
 The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
 And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.
 As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.

 Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
 Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
 Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.
IMPULSION. n. f. [from impulsio, Fr. impulsus, Latin.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.
 The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon's Natural History.
 To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.
 But thou didst plead
 Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st Find some occasion to infect our foci. Milton's Agonistes.

IMPULSIVE. adj. [from impulsus, Fr. from impulsus.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.
 Nature and duty bind him to obedience;
 But those being placed in a lower sphere,
 His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
 Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion Against their proper course. Denham's Sophy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South's Sermons.
 Poor men! poor papers! we and they Do some impulsive force obey,
 And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

1. Within some place; not out.
How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falsehood as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the sacred bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South's Sermon.
I fear me, you'll be in 'till then. Shaksp. Care.
 2. Engaged to any affair.
We know the worst can come: 'tis thought upon:
We cannot shift being in; we must go on.
These pragmatical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estr.
 3. Placed in some state.
Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins, who's in, who's out. Shaksp.
Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in. Pope.
 4. Noting entrance.
Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shaksp. Care.
He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
—Let me see't; I'll in; I'll in: follow your friend's advice, I'll in. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve larger than could be introduced, in at either of those holes.
Woodward on F. J. J. 15.

INA

5. Into any place.
Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm. Collier.
Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryd. Georg.
6. Close; home.
The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.
IN has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as ilative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.
INABILITY. n. f. [in and ability.] Impuissance; impotence;
want of power.
If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to insure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and thro' experience the more wisdom. Hooker.
Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation?
Rogers.
- INABSTINENCE. n. f.* [in and abstinence.] Intemperance; want of power to abstain.
Dissolves dire, of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve Shall bring on man. Milt. Par. Lost.
- INACCESSIBLE. adj.* [from inaccessibilis, Fr. in and accessibilis.] Not to be reached; not to be approached.
Whatever you are,
That in this desert inaccessibles,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shaksp. Care.
Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
There shall we clearly see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distinct view of.
Ray on the Creation.
This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible, and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her. Dryden.
- INACCURACY. n. f.* [from inaccurate.] Want of exactness.
INACCURATE. adj. [in and accurate.] Not exact; not accurate.
It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.
- INACTION. n. f.* [from inaction, Fr. in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.
The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present: I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.
- INACTIVE. adj.* [in and active.] Not busy; not diligent;
idle; indolent; sluggish.
- INACTIVELY. adv.* [from inactive.] Idly; without labour;
without motion; sluggishly.
In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.
- INACTIVITY. n. f.* [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.
A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers's Sermons.
Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
Is inactivity at best. Swift.
- INADEQUATE. adj.* [in and adequatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.
Remember for vice
Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
What farther means can reason now direct? Dryden.
Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred.
Locke.
- INADEQUATELY. adv.* [from inadequate.] Defectively; not completely.
These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately.
Boyle.
- INADVERTENCE. n. f.* [from inadvertent, French; from inadvertentia, Latin.] INADVERTENT. adj. [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent;
careless.
1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.
There is a vast difference between them; indeed, as vast as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprise and set purpose. South.
From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present that they mind nothing else. L'Estrange.
2. Act or effect of negligence.
Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertency or inconsideration. Government of the Tongue.
The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and

INA

- inadvertencies*, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.
- INADVERTENT. adj.* [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent;
careless.
- INADVERTENTLY. adv.* [from inadvertent.] Carelessly; negligently.
Aristotle mentions Telegonus as the son of Circe and Ulysses, who afterwards slew his father with the bone of a fish inadvertently.
Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground. Clarissa.
- INALIENABLE. adj.* [in and alienable.] That cannot be alienated.
- INALIMENTAL. adj.* [in and alimental.] Affording no nourishment.
Dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment; and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victual. Bacon.
- INAMISSIBLE. adj.* [from inamissibilis, French; in and amissum, Lat.]
Not to be lost.
These advantages are inamissible. Hammond.
- INANE. adj.* [from inanis, Latin.] Empty; void.
We sometimes speak of place in the great inane, beyond the confines of the world. Locke.
- TO INANIMATE. v. a.* [in and anima, Latin.] To animate;
to quicken. This word is not in use.
There's a kind of world remaining still,
Though the which did inanimate and fill
The world be gone; yet in this last long night
Her ghost doth walk, that is, a glimmering light. Donne.
- INANIMATE. } adj.* [from inanimatus, Latin; inanimé, French.]
INANIMATED. } Void of life; without animation.
The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled;
but inanimate bodies have their spirits no whit inflamed.
Bacon's Natural History.
- The golden goddess, present at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' inanimate fair,
And gave the sign of granting All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Bentley.
They can neither subsist nor be produced by the powers of mechanism; for both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimate part of the universe. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
- From roofs when Verrio's colours fall,
And leave inanimate the naked wall,
Still in thy song should vanquish'd France appear. Pope.
- INANITION. n. f.* [from inanimatio, Fr. inanimis, Lat.] Emptiness of body; want of fulness in the vessels of the animal.
Weakness which attends fevers proceeds from too great fulness in the beginnings, and too great inanition in the latter end of the disease. Arbutnot on Diet.
- INANITY. n. f.* [from inanis, Latin.] Emptiness; void space.
This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities but so little ones as no body whatever can come to, but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide. Digby on Bodies.
- INAPPETENCY. n. f.* [in and appetentia, Latin.] Want of stomach or appetite.
- INAPPLICABLE. adj.* [in and applicabile.] Not to be put to a particular use.
- INAPPLICATION. n. f.* [from inapplication, Fr. in and application.]
Indolence; negligence.
- INARABLE. adj.* [in and aro, Latin.] Not capable of tillage.
Diët.
- TO INARCH. v. a.* [in and arch.]
Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts firs, and pines, which will not succeed
by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INB

INARTICULATE. adj. [inarticulatus, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters.
Wilkins's Math. Magic.
By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn music, which is inarticulate poetry, does in churches.
Dryden.

INARTICULATELY. adv. [from inarticulate.] Not distinctly.
INARTICULATENESS. n. f. [from inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; want of distinctness in pronouncing.

INARTIFICIAL. adj. [in and artificial.] Contrary to art.
I have ranked this among the effects; and it may be thought inartificial to make it the cause also.
Decay of Piety.

INARTIFICIALLY. adv. [from inartificial.] Without art; in a manner contrary to the rules of art.

This lofty humour is clumsily and inartificially managed, when its affected by those of a self-denying profession. Collier.
INATTENTION. n. f. [inattention, Fr. in and attention.] Disregard; negligence; neglect.

Persons keep out of the reach of the reproofs of the ministry, or hear with such inattention or contempt as renders them of little effect.
Rogers's Sermons.

We see a strange inattention to this most important prospect.
Rogers's Sermons.

Novel lays attract our raptur'd ears;
But old, the mind with inattention hears.
Pope.
INATTENTIVE. adj. [in and attentive.] Careless; negligent; regardless.

If we indulge the frequent roving of passions, we shall procure an unsteady and inattentive habit.
Watts.

INAUDIBLE. adj. [in and audible.] Not to be heard; void of sound.

Let's take the infant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'nt decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them.
Shakespeare.

TO INAUGURATE. v. a. [inauguro, Latin.] To consecrate; to invest with a new office by solemn rites; to begin with good omens; to begin.

Those beginnings of years were propitious to him, as if kings did chuse remarkable days to inaugurate their favours, that they may appear acts as well of the time as of the will.
Watson.

INAUGURATION. n. f. [inauguration, Fr. inauguro, Latin.] Investiture by solemn rites.

The royal olive was solemnly sworn, at his inauguration, to observe these things inviolable.
Hood's Vocal Foryst.

At his regal inauguration his old father resigned the kingdom to him.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INAURATION. n. f. [inauro, Latin.] The act of gilding or covering with gold.

The Romans had the art of gilding after our manner; but some sort of their inauration, or gilding, must have been much dearer than ours.
Arbutnot on Coins.

INAUSPICIOUS. adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill-omened; unlucky; unfortunate.

Oh here
I will set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh.
Shakesf. Rom. and Juliet.

Though heaven's inauspicious eye
Lay black on love's nativity,
Her eye a strong appeal can give;
Beauty, smiles, and love shall live.
Craftsman.

The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces.
Boyle.

With inauspicious love a wretched swain
Pursu'd the fairest nymph of all the plain;
She plung'd him hopeless in a deep despair.
Dryden.

INBORN. n. f. [in and being.] Inherence; inseparableness.
When we say the bowl is round, the boy is witty, these are proper or inherent modes; for they have a fort of inbeing in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it.
Watts.

INBORN. adj. [in and born.] Innate; implanted by nature.

Led by sense of good,
Inborn to all, I sought my needful food.
Dryden.
All passions being inborn with us, we are almost equally judges of them.
Dryden.

Some Carolina, to heaven's dictates true,
Thy inborn worth with conscious eyes shall see,
And slight th' imperial diadem for thee.
Addison.

INBREATHED. adj. [in and breath.] Inspired; infused by inspiration.

Blest pair of syrens, pledges of heav'n's joy,
Sphere-born harmonious sisters, voice and verse,
Wed your divine sounds, and mixt power employ,
Dead things with inbreath'd sense able to pierce.
Milton.

INBRED. adj. [in and bred.] Produced within; hatched or generated within.

INC

My inbred enemy

Forth issu'd.
Milton's Paradise Lost, l. ii.
A man thinks better of his children than they deserve; but there is an impulse of tenderness, and there must be some effect for the setting of that inbred affection at work. L'Estr.

But he unmov'd contemns their idle threat;
And inbred worth doth boasting valour slight.
Dryden.

TO INCAGE. v. a. [in and cage.] To coop up; to shut up; to confine in a cage, or any narrow space.

And yet incaged in so small a verge,
Thy waste is no whit lesser than thy lord's.

Conceive.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

INCALESCENCE. n. f. [incalisco, Latin.] The state of growing warm; ing warm; warmth; incipient heat.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, making no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incaliscence, and regulated elevation from wine. Brown.

The oil preserves the ends of the bones from incaliscence, which they, being solid bodies, would necessarily contract from a swift motion.
Ray on the Creation.

INCANTATION. n. f. [incantatio, Fr. incanto, Lat.] Charms uttered by singing; enchantment.

My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

By Adam's hearkening to his wife, mankind, by that her incantation, became the subject of labour, sorrow, and death.
Raleigh's History of the World.

The great wonders of witches, their carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, are reported to be wrought, not by incantations or ceremonies, but by anointing themselves all over, move a man to think that these fables are the effects of imagination; for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely.
Bacon's Natural History.

The name of a city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms and incantations.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The nuptial rights his outrage strait attends;
The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends;
The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did, defeats.
Garth.

The commands which our religion hath imposed on its followers are not like the absurd ceremonies of pagan idolatry, the frivolous rites of their initiations and worship, that might look like incantations and magick, but had no tendency to make mankind the happier.
Bentley's Sermons.

INCANTATORY. adj. [from incanto, Latin.] Dealing by enchantment; magical.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the like incantatory impostors, daily delude them.
Brown's Vulg. Errors.

TO INCANTON. v. a. [in and canton.] To unite to a canton or separate community.

When the cantons of Bern and Zurich proposed the incorporating Geneva in the cantons, the Roman catholics, fearing the Protestant interest, proposed the incantoning of Confiance as a counterpoise.
Addison on Italy.

It is neither a substance perfect, nor a substance inchoate, or in the way of perfection. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

INCHOATION. n. f. [inchoatus, Lat.] Inception; beginning.

It discerneth of four kinds of causes; forces, frauds, crimes various of felonate, and the inchoations or middle acts towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon's Henry VII.

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCHOATIVE. adj. [inchoative, Fr. inchoativus, Latin.] Inceptive; noting inchoation or beginning.

TO INCISE. v. a. [from incido, to cut, Latin.]

Medicines are said to incise which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and most salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another: thus some expectorating medicines are said to incise or cut the phlegm.

The menses are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incise the mucus in the first passages. Arbutnot.

INCIDENCE. n. f. [incido, to fall, Latin; incidences, French.]

INCIDENCY. n. f. [incido, to fall, Latin; incidences, French.]

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence. In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact. Quincy.

In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence, from the object to the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opt.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflexion than from the direct incidence of his happiness. Norris.

2. [Incident, Latin.] Accident; hap; casualty.

What incidence thou dost guess of harm declare,
I, creeping towards me. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

INC

INCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incident, Latin.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; falling in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise mens rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hooker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Watts.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be sometimes guilty of.

INCIDENT. n. f. [incident, Fr. from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's Holy War.

INCITATION. n. f. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse.

Dr. Ridley, in his tract of magnetical bodies, defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations. Gervinus of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity. Deacy of Piety.

TO INCITE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shakespeare's H. V.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right. Shakespeare.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom. Bacon.

The principles of nature and common reason, which in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

INCITEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting power.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

A person sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island. Milton.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage. Pope's Statius.

INCLEMENCY. n. f. [inclemence, Fr. inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heaven's inclemency some ease we find:
Our tocs we vanquish'd by our valour left. Dryden.

INCLEMENT. adj. [in and clément, Latin.] Unmerciful; un pitying; void of tenderness; harsh.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow. Milton.

Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land;
Propitious to my wants, a vest supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky. Pope.

INCLINABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Latin.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition.

People are not always inclinable to the best. Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain mens writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured. Hooker.

Desire,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINATION. n. f. [inclination, inclination, Fr. inclinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency towards any point.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter. Newton's Opt.

INC

2. Natural aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way. Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Cavendish.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well-inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law. South's Sermons.

4. Love; affection.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the thillite inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

5. Disposition of mind.

Bid him

And forc'd to drink their vapour. Shakespeare.

TO INCLUDE. v. a. [include, Latin.]

1. To inclose; to shut in.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire leaf.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included. Swift.

INCLUSIVE. adj. [inclusif, French.]

1. Inclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that mult round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to fear me to the brain. Shakespeare's R. III.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number; as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells. Swift.

INCOHERENCY. n. f. [in and coherence.]
1. Want of connection; incongruity; incoherence; want of dependance of one part upon another.
I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.
Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.
2. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.
If plaster be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.
INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]
1. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependance of one part upon another.
We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.
2. Without cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.
Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as puerous as those of marble or gravel. Woodward.
INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently; inconsequentially.
The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

suffering no decay; of being subject to no defect.
INDEFECTIBLE. adj. [in and defectus, Lat.] Unfailing; not liable to defect or decay.
INDEFEISIBLE. adj. [indefeissibile, French.] Not to be cut off;
not to be vacated; irrevocable.
So indefeissible is our estate in those joys, that, if we do not sell it in reversion, we shall, when once invested, be beyond the possibility of ill husbandry. Decay of Piety.
INDEFEISIBLY. adv. [in and defensum, Lat.] What cannot be defended or maintained.
As they extend the rule of consulting Scripture to all the actions of common life, even so far as to the taking up of a sword, so it is altogether false and indefeissible. Sanderfon.
INDEFINITE. adj. [indefinitus, Latin; indefinit, Fr.]
1. Not determined; not limited; not settled.
Though a position should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as ashes are more generative than dust. Bacon's Essays.
Her advancement was left indefinite; but thus, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had. Bacon.
Tragedy and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epic poem: the time of this last is left indefinite. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits.
Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension. Spektor.
INDEFINITELY. adv. [from indefinite.]
1. Without any settled or determinate limitation.
We observe that custom, whereunto St. Paul alludeth, and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to shew indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance. Hooker.
We conceive no more than the letter beareth; that is, four times, or indefinitely more than thrice. Brown's Vulgar Err.
A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged, upon some occasions, by the express command of God. Smalridge.
2. To a degree indefinite.
If the world be indefinitely extended, that is, so far as no human intellect can fancy any bounds of it, then what we see must be the least part. Ray on the Creation.
INDEFINITUDE. n. f. [from indefinite.] Quantity not limited by our understanding, though yet finite.
They arise to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not in-

IND

definitude, by their various positions, combinations, and conjunctions. Haes's Origin of Mankind.
INDELIBERATE. adj. [indeliberat, Fr. in and deliberate.] Un-INDELIBERATED. adj. [premeditated; done without consideration.
Actions proceeding from blandishments, or sweet persuasions, if they be indeliberated, as in children, who want the use of reason, are not presently free actions. Bramhall.
The love of God better can consist with the indeliberate commissions of many sins, than with an allowed penitence in any one. Gore's new of the Tongue.
INDELIBLY. adj. [indelible, Fr. indelibilis, Lat. in and delible.]
It should be written indelible.
1. Not to be blotted out or effaced.

which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. King Charles.
TO INDENT. v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Lat.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakespeare's As you like.
The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton's Paradise Lost.
Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton.
The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. H. southward.
TO INDENT. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independency:
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [independent, Fr. in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republic, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addis.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superior cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wife Author of all things. Bentley's Sermons.

INDEPENDENT. n. s. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superior authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Saunders.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPENDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing, independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESERV'T. n. s. [in and desert.] Want of merit.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own in-deserv't.

INDESERVINGLY. adv. [in-deserv't, Fr. in and deservir, Latin.] Without cessation.

They continue a month in-deserv'tly. Ray on the Creation.

INDEXIBILITY. n. s. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness.

The indexibility of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. s. [maranta, Latin.] A root.

It has a flower consisting of one leaf, almost funnel-shaped, opening in six parts, three of which are alternately larger than the others: the lower part of the flower-cup afterwards be- comes an oval shaped fruit, having one cell, with one hard rough seed. It was brought from the Spanish settlements of America into the islands of Barbadoes and Jamaica, where it is cultivated as a medicinal plant, it being a sovereign remedy for curing the bite of warts, and expelling the poison of the manchineel tree. This root the Indians apply to extract the venom of their arrows: after they have dug it up they clean it, mash it, and lay it as a poultice to the wounded part, and are generally successful in the cure.

INDIAN Cress. n. s. [arvicola, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves are round, umbilicated, and placed alternately; the stalks trailing; the cup of the flower is quinquelfid; the flowers consist of five leaves in form of a violet; the seeds are roundish and rough, three of them succeeding each flower. The species are five.

INDIAN Fig. n. s. [opuntia, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose, having a great number of stamina in the centre, which grow upon the top of the ovary; the ovary afterwards becomes a fleshy umbilicated fruit, with a soft pulp, including many seeds, which are for the most part angular.

INDIAN Red. n. s. A kind of mineral earth.

Indian red, so called by the painters, is a species of ochre; and is a very fine purple earth, of firm compact texture, and great weight: while in the stratum it is of a pure blood colour, and almost of a stony hardness: when dry it is of a fine glow- ing red, of a rough dusty surface, and, when broken, full of white particles, large, solid, bright, and glittering. It is also called Persian earth, and is dug in the island of Ormuz in the Persian gulph, and also at Bombay.

Is this of her's? Shakespeare's Richard III.

3. Not fair; not honest.

Think you, that any means under the sun
Can assure you to indirect a course? Daniel's Civil War.

Those things which they do know they may, upon sundry indirect considerations, let pass; and although themselves do not err, yet may they deceive others. Hooker.

O pity and shame! that they who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside, to tread Paths indirect. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi.

Indirect dealing will be discovered one time or other, and then he loses his reputation. Tillotson.

INDIRECTION. n. f. [in and direction.]

1. Oblique means; tendency not in a straight line.

And thus do we, of wisdom and of reach,
With windlances, and with essays of byas,
By indirections find directions out. Shaksp. Hamlet.

2. Dishonest practice.

I had rather coin my heart than wing
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,
By any indirection. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

INDIRECTLY. adv. [from indirect.]

1. Not in a right line; obliquely.

2. Not in express terms.

Still he suppresses the name Ithaca, which continues his doubts and hopes; and at last the indirectly mentions it. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

3. Unfairly; not rightly.

He bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him the true challenger. Shaksp. Henry V.

He that takes any thing from his neighbour, which was justly forfeited, to satisfy his own revenge or avarice, is tied to repentance, but not to restitution: because I took the forfeiture indirectly, I am answerable to God for my unhandlome, unjust, or uncharitable circumstances. Taylor.

INDIRECTNESS. n. f. [in and directness.]

1. Obliquity.

2. Unfairness.

INDISCERNIBLE. adj. [in and discernible.] Not perceptible; not discoverable.

They questioned a duty that had been indisputably granted to so many preceding kings. Hosel's Vocal Forest.

INDISOLUBLE. adj. [in and dissoluble.]

1. Indissoluble; not separable as to its parts.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbued with more acid, becomes a metallic salt. Newt. Opt.

2. Not to be broken; binding for ever.

Deposition and degradation are without hope of any remission, and therefore the law files them an indissoluble bond; but a censure, a dissolvable bond. Ascham's Perfection.

INDISSOLUBILITY. n. f. [indissolubilitas, Fr. from indissoluble.] Resistance of a dissolving power; firmness; stability.

What hoops hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together, from whence steel has its firmness, and the parts of a diamond their hardness and indissolubility. Lacke.

INDISSOLUBLY. adv. [indissolubly, Fr. indissolubilis, Lat. in and dissolubly.]

1. Refusing all separation of its parts; firm; stable.

When common gold and lead are mingled, the lead may be severed almost unaltered; yet if, instead of the gold, a tantillum of the red elixir be mingled with the saturn, their union will be so indissoluble, that there is no possible way of separating the diffused elixir from the fixed lead. Boyle.

IND

Ere yet she grew
To this deep-laid indissoluble state. Thomson's Spring.

2. Binding for ever; subsisting for ever.

Far more comfort it were for us to be joined with you in bands of indissoluble love and amity, to live as if our persons being many, our souls were but one. Hooker.

There is the supreme and indissoluble confanguinity between men, of which the heathen poet faith we are all his generation. Bacon's holy War.

They might justly wonder, that men so taught, so obliged to be kind to all, should behave themselves so contrary to such heavenly instructions, such indissoluble obligations. South.

INDISSOLUBLENESS. n. f. [from indissoluble.] Indissolubility; resistance to separation of parts.

Adam, though consisting of a composition intrinsically dissolvable, might have held, by the Divine Will, a state of immortality and indissolubleness of his composition. Hale.

INDISSOLUBLY. adv. [from indissoluble.]

1. In a manner refusing all separation.

On they move
Indissolubly firm; nor obvious hill,
Nor straitning vale, nor wood, nor stream divide
Their perfect ranks. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To northern Oracles. Phillips.

2. For ever obligatorily.

INDISTINCT. adj. [indistinct, Fr. in and distinctus, Latin.]

1. Not plainly marked; confused.

That which is now a horse, even with thought,
The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note;
But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear. Dryden.

When we speak of the infinite divisibility of matter, we keep a very clear and distinct idea of division and divisibility; but when we come to parts too small for our senses, our ideas of these little bodies become obscure and indistinct. Watts.

2. Not exactly discerning.

We throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Ev'n 'till we make the main and th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard. Shakespeare's Othello.

INDISTINCTION. n. f. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusion; uncertainty.

The indistinction of many of the same name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Omission of discrimination.

An indistinction of all persons, or equality of all orders, is far from being agreeable to the will of God. Spratt.

INDISTINCTLY. adv. [from indistinct.]

INDISTINCTNESS. n. f. [from indistinct.] Confusion; uncertainty; obscurity.

There is unevenness or indistinctness in the style of these places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline humour grow flatter than before; so that the light, for want of a sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it, and by consequence paint in the bottom of the eye a confused picture; and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused. Newton.

INDISTURBANCE. n. f. [in and disturb.] Calmness; freedom from disturbance.

What is called by the stoicks apathy, and by the scepticks indisturbance, seems all but to mean great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

INDIVIDUAL. adj. [individu, individuel, Fr. individuum, Lat.]

1. Separate from others of the same species; single; numerically one.

Neither is it enough to consult, secundum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shown in the choice of individuals. Bacon.

They present us with images

IND

Know all the good that individuals find,
Lie in three words, health, peace and competence. Pope.
We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.
The object of any particular idea is called an individual; so
Peter is an individual man, London an individual city. Watts.
2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjointed.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.
Under his great vicegerent reign abide United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. v.
INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.
Crambe would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular; that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said that a man is not the same he was, and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbutnot.
INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.] With separate or distinct existence; numerically.
How should that subtilt solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very fane whereby others subsist with it. Hooker.
I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakewill's Providence.
TO INDIVIDUATE. v. a. [from individuum, Latin.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.
Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. Mure against Atheism.
No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and indivisuate him from all other writers. Dryden.
INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individuate.] That which makes an individual.
What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.
INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [from individuum, Latin.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.
INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power.
Not in use.
How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Caesus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from indivisible.] State in which no division can be made.
A pebble and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician. Locke.
INDIVISIBLE. adj. [from indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller;
having reached the last degree of divisibility.
By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.
Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
INDIVISIBLY. adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.
INDOUBLE. adj. [in and double.] Unlearnable; insusceptible of instruction.
INDOCILE. adj. [from indocilis, Fr. indocile, Latin.] Unlearnable; incapable of being instructed.
These certainly are the fools in the text, indocile, intractable fools, whose stupidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself. Bentley's Sermons.
INDOCILITY. n. f. [from indocile, Fr. in and docile.] Unlearnableness; refusal of instruction.
TO INDOCTRINATE. v. a. [from indocetrare, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.
Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indoctrinating his young unexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently. Clarendon.
They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indoctrinated, are strongly assured of the truth and co-operative excellency of their receptions. Glanv. Scap.
INDOCTRINATION. n. f. [from indoctrinatus.] Instruction; information.

IND

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior in-doctrinations, yet are these authorities but temporary, and not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Bra.
INDOLENCE. n. f. [in and dolere, Latin; indolence, French.]
1. Freedom from pain.
As there must be indolence where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.
Let Epicurus give indolence as an attribute to his gods, and place in it the happiness of the blest: the divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.
The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Belingbroke.
INDOLENT. adj. [French.]
1. Free from pain. Ainsworth.
2. Careless; lazy; inattentive; listless.
Ill fits a chief
To waste long nights in indolent repose. Pope's Iliad.
INDOLENTLY. adv. [from indolent.]
1. With freedom from pain.
2. Carelessly; lazily; inattentively; listlessly.
While lull'd by sound, and undisturb'd by wit,
Calm and serene you indolently sit. Addison.

with gifts, whether of fortune or nature. See ENDOW.
INDRAUGHT. n. f. [in and draught.]
1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.
Ebb and floods there could be none, when there was no in-draughts, bays, or gulphs to receive a flood. Raleigh.
2. Inlet; passage inwards.
Navigable rivers are so many indraughts to attain wealth.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
TO INDRINCH. v. a. [from drinch.] To soak; to drown.
My hopes lie drown'd; in many fathoms deep
They lie indrunch'd. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
INDUBIOUS. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.
Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposing an indubious confidence in those antipathetical spirits. Harvey.
INDUBITABLE. adj. [from indubitabilis, Lat. indubitabilis, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable.
When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitabilis.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.
If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Watson's Architecture.
The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities. Spratt's Sermons.
I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Bentley's Sermons.
INDUBITATE. adj. [from indubitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.
If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the in-dubitate heirs of the crown. Bacon's Henry VII.
I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line. Watson.
TO INDUCE. v. a. [from inducere, Fr. inducere, Latin.]
1. To persuade; to influence to any thing.
The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hooker.
This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.
Desire with thee still longer to converse Induced me. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. To produce by persuasion or influence.
Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
As this belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Fryer.
3. To offer by way of inductions, or consequential reasoning.
They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
4. To inculcate; to enforce.
This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person

IND

person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.
5. To cause extrinsically; to produce.
Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.
Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.
6. To introduce; to bring into view.
To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of flocks; now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.
The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.
7. To bring on; to superinduce.
Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.
INDUCEMENT. n. f. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.
The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath diminished farther reason. Hobbes.
Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade. Hooker.
That mov'd me to,
Then mark th' inducement. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
He lives
Higher degree of life; inducement strong For us. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to find my son. Milton's Agonist.
Innuces occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.
INDUCER. n. f. [from inducere.] A persuader; one that influences.

1. To introduce; to bring in.
The ceremonies in the gathering were first induced by the Venetians. Sandy's Travels.
2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.
If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe's Paragon.
INDUCT. n. f. [from inductus, Latin.]
1. Introduction; entrance.
These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.
2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general; as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts's Logic.
The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon's Natural History.
Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.
Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opt.
He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.
INDUCTIVE. adj. [from inductus.]

INFAMOUSNESS. n. f. [infamie, Fr. infamia, Lat.] INFAMY. n. f. [infamia, Fr. infamia, Lat.] 1. Publick reproach; notoriety of bad character. Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are the infamy of the people. Ezek. xxxvi. 3.

I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruin my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Shaksp. Henry VI.

The noble idle doth want her proper limbs,
Her face deac'd with scars of infamy. Shaksp. Rich. III.

Wilful perpetrations of unworthy actions brand, with a not indelible characters of infamy, the name and memory to posterity. King Charles.

INFANCY. n. f. [infantia, Latin.] 1. The first part of life. Usually extended by naturalists to seven years. Dare we affirm it was ever his meaning, that unto their salvation, who even from their tender infancy never knew any other faith or religion than only Christian, no kind of teaching can be available, saving that which was to be useful for the first universal conversion of Gentiles, hating Christianity? Hooker.

Pirithous came t' attend
This worthy Thecus, his familiar friend:
Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.

The insensible impressions on our tender infancies have very important and lasting consequences. Locke.

2. Civil infancy, extended by the English law to one and twenty years. 3. First age of any thing; beginning; original; commencement. In Spain our springs, like old mens children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

The difference between the riches of Roman citizens in the infancy and in the grandeur of Rome, will appear by comparing the first valuation of estates with the estates afterwards possessed. Arbutnot on Caim.

INFANT. n. f. [infans, French; infans, Latin.] 1. A child from the birth to the end of the seventh year. It being a part of their virtuous education, ferveth greatly both to nourish in them the fear of God, and to put us in continual remembrance of that powerful grace, which openeth the mouths of infants to sound his praise. Hooker.

Within the infant rind of this small flower Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shaksp. Macbeth.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days. J. lxv. 20.

First the thrill sound of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage. Roscommon.

Young mothers wildly stare, with fear possess'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast. Dryd. Æn.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood. Dryd. n's Virg. Georg.

2. [In law.] A young person to the age of one and twenty. INFANTIA. n. f. [Spanish.] A prince's descended from the royal blood of Spain. INFANTICIDE. n. f. [infanticide, Fr. infanticidium, Lat.] The slaughter of the infants by Herod. INFANTILE. adj. [infantilis, Latin.] Pertaining to an infant. The fly lies all the Winter in these balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity 'till the following Spring. Perb.

INFANTRY. n. f. [infanterie, French.] The foot soldiers of an army. The principal strength of an army consisteth in the infantry or foot; and to make good infantry it requireth men bred in some free and plentiful manner. Bacon's Henry VII.

That small infantry,
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton.

INFARCTION. n. f. [in and farcie, Latin.] Stuffing; confection. An hypocondriack consumption is occasioned by an infection and obstruction of the spleen. Harvey.

TO INFATUATE. v. a. [infatuare, from in and fatue, Latin; infatur, French.] To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding. The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of their wicked; and suffering even those, out of a conscience of their guilt, to grow more wicked. Clarendon.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overpread the infatuated, gentle world; a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples. Hammond.

INF

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it. Addison on Italy.

The carriage of our atheists or deists is amazing: no dotage to infatuate, no phrensy to extravagant as theirs. Bentley.

May hypocrites,
That sily speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd, 'till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose. Philips.

INFATUATION. n. f. [from infatuate.] The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason. Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests and false propositions, it is just with God to finite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations. South's Sermon.

INFATUING. n. f. [from infatuus, Lat.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word. As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe that he did withal bring a kind of male-diction and infatuing upon the marriage, as an ill prodigium. Bacon's Henry VII.

INFATIGABLE. adj. [in and fatigable.] Impracticable. This is so difficult and infatigable, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science. Glauv. Scept.

Sidney.*

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Shak. R. III.

The nature of bad news infects the teller. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Ev'ry day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it to
To make the scepter his. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shaksp. Macbeth.

She speaks poniards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north-star. Shaksp. Macbeth.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw. Milton.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious. Infected be the air whereon they ride, And damn'd all those that trust them! Shaksp. Macbeth.

INFECTION. n. f. [infection, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison. Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from disordered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shaksp. Cymbeline.

The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self. Shaksp. R. III.

Hence,
Left that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Shaksp. King Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all. Bacon's Natural History.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities. The most infectious pestilence upon thee! Shaksp. Macbeth.

In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operation of some poisons, that are received only by the smell. Temple.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously. The will does, that is inclinable To what infectiously itself affects. Shaksp. Troil. and Cressida.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INF

INFECTIVE. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of contagion. True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Sid.

INFECUND. n. f. [infecundus, Latin.] Unfruitful; infertile. How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INFECUNDITY. n. f. [infecunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenness. INFELICITY. n. f. [infelicitas, Fr. infelicitas, Latin.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity. Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy. Glauv. Scept. c. 1.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

TO INFERR. v. a. [inferre, French; inferre, Latin.] 1. To bring on; to induce. Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs. Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thence also happier, shall not be withheld Thy hearing. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

Great,
Or bright, infer not excellence: the earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glistering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines. Milton.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should all infer the same conclusion. Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator, Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

INFERENCE. n. f. [inference, French, from inferre.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments. Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glauv.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFERRIBLE. adj. [from inferre.] Deducible from premised grounds. As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferrible from their premises. Brown.

INFERRIORITY. n. f. [inferioritas, Fr. from inferior.] Lower state of dignity or value. The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFERIOUR. adj. [inferior, Lat. inferior, French.] 1. Lower in place. 2. Lower in station or rank of life. A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdaining him. South.

3. Lower in value or excellency. The love of liberty with life is giv'n, And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate. General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFERIOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another. INFERNAL. adj. [infernal, French; infernus, Latin.] Hellish; tartarean. His gigantick limbs, with large embrace, Infold nine acres of infernal space. Dryden's Æn.

INFERNAL STONE. n. f. [infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill's Mat. Med.

INFERTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; without fecundity; infecund. Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable. Government of the Tongue.

INFERTILITY. n. f. [infertilitas, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

INF

The same distemper of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned also the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To INFEST. v. a. [infester, Fr. infest, Latin.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.

They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause. Hooker.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired. Hook.

Unto my feeble breast

Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,
And hearts of greatest heroes dost entage. Spenser.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his. Bacon's Henry VII.

These, said the genius, are envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions that infest human life. Addison's Spectator.

No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects. Arbutnot on Diet.

INFESTIVITY. n. f. [in and festivity.] Mourningfulness; want of cheerfulness.

INFESTED. adj. [in and fest.] Ranking; inveterate.

This curled creature, mindful of that old Infested grudge, the which his mother felt,
So soon as Clarion he did behold,
His heart with vengeful malice inly swelt. Spenser.

INFESTATION. n. f. [in and festum, Lat.] The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infestation of the tenant, and was usually called knight's service. Hale's Common Law of England.

INFIDEL. n. f. [infidelle, Fr. infidèle, Latin.] An unbeliever; a miscreant; a pagan; one who rejects Christianity.

Exhorting her, if she did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world. Hooker.

INFIDELITY. n. f. [infidelité, French; infidelitas, Lat.]

1. Want of faith.
2. The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.
3. Disbelief of Christianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent servours of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the faculty of mankind depended upon it. Addison's Spectator.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, French; infinitus, Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.
2. Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?
A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
Time's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controuls
The inward bent and motion of our souls!
Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease? Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

INFINITELY. adv. [infinite.] Without limits; without bounds; immensely.

Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am infinitely bound. Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.

The king saw that contrariwise it would follow, that England, though much less in territory, yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than those other nations have. Bacon's Henry VII.

INF

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

INFINITENESS. n. f. [from infinite.] Immenity; boundlessness; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always hear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightiness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weaknesses. Taylor.

INFINITESIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFINITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitive, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms, or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

INFINITUDE. n. f. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.
2. Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar Stood rull'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd. Mit. Par. Lof.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addison's Spectator.

INFINITY. n. f. [infinite, French; infinitas, Latin.]

1. Immenity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.
2. There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
3. The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he our felicity and bliss. Hooker.

2. Endless number. An hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. Obstinacy; temper not to be bent; inexorable pertinacity.
3. Not to be bent or incurvated.

Such errors as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible to the powerful arm of reason. Brown's Preface to Vul. Err.

Too great rigidity and elasticity of the fibres makes them inflexible to the causes, to which they ought to yield. Arbutnot.

The man resolv'd and steady to his trust,
Inflexible to ill, and obstinately just. Addison.

A man of an upright and inflexible temper, in the execution of his country's laws, can overcome all private fear. Addison.

3. Not to be changed or altered.

The nature of things are inflexible, and their natural relations unalterable: we must bring our understandings to things, and not bend things to our fancies. Watts.

INFLEXIBLY. adv. [from inflexible.] Inexorably; invariably; without relaxation or remission.

It should be begun early, and inflexibly kept to, till there appears not the least reluctance. Locke.

To INFLECT. v. a. [inflecto, Latin; inflecto, Fr.]

To put in act or impose as a punishment.

I know no pain, they can inflect upon him,
Will make him say I mov'd him to those arms. Shakesp.

Sufficient is this punishment which was inflicted. 2 Cor. ii.

What the potent victor in his rage
Can else inflect. Milton.

What heart could wish, what hand inflect this dire disgrace?
By diseases we condemn ourselves to greater torments than have been yet invented by anger or revenge, or inflicted by the greatest tyrants upon the worst of men. Temple.

INFLECTER.

ING

INGENERER. n. f. [from ingender.] He that generates. See INGENDER.

INGENERABLE. adj. [in and generate.] Not to be produced or brought into being.

Divers naturalists esteem the air, as well as other elements, to be ingenerable and incorruptible. Boyle.

INGENERATE. adj. [from ingenatus, Latin.]

INGENERATED. adj. [from ingenatus, Latin.]

1. Inborn; innate; inbred.

Those virtues were rather feigned and affected things to serve his ambition, than true qualities ingenerate in his judgment or nature. Bacon's Henry VII.

In divers children their ingenerate and femal powers lie deep, and are of slow disclosure. Wotton.

Those noble habits are ingenerated in the soul, as religion, gratitude, obedience, and tranquillity. Hale's Origin of Man.

2. Unbegotten. Not commonly used.

Yet shall we demonstrate the same, from persons presumed as far from us in condition as time; that is, our first and ingenerated forefathers. Brown's Vulg. Err.

INGENIOUS. adj. [from ingenius, Fr. ingeniosus, Latin.]

1. Witty; inventive; possessed of genius.

'Tis a per'ous boy,

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable:

He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakesp. R. III.

Our ingenious friend Cowley not only has employed much eloquence to persuade that truth in his preface, but has in one of his poems given a noble example of it. Boyle.

2. Mental; intellectual. Not in use.

The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,

That I stand up, and have ingenio s feeling

Of my huge sorrows; better I were distract. Shakespeare.

INGENIOUSLY. adv. [from ingenious.] Wittingly; subtly.

I will not pretend to judge by common fears, or the schemes of men too ingeniously politic. Temple.

INGENIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ingenious.]

1. Wittingness; subtilty; strength of genius.

The greater appearance of ingeniousness there is in the practice I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is. Boyle.

INGENITE. adj. [from ingenitus, Latin.] Innate; inborn; native; ingenerate.

Aristotle affirms the mind to be at first a mere tabula;

and that notions are not ingenite, and imprinted by the finger of nature, but by the latter and more languid impressions of sense, being only the reports of observation, and the result of so many repeated experiments. South.

We give them this ingenite, moving force,

That makes them always downward take their course. Black.

INGENUITY. n. f. [from ingenuus, Fr. from ingenuus.]

1. Openness; fairness; candour; freedom from dissimulation.

Such of high quality, or other of particular note, as shall fall under my pen, I shall not let pass without their due character, being part of my professed ingenuity. Wotton.

My constancy I to the planets give;

My truth, to them who at the court do live;

Mine ingenuity and openness. Donne.

To Jesuits; to buffoons my pensiveness.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to descend to so base, so ignoble a vice. Gou. of the Tongue.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confesses, you must commend his ingenuity, and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [From ingenious.] Wit; invention; genius; subtilty; acuteness.

These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of manly ingenuites. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

The ancient atomical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Glanv. Stepl.

Such sots have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fineness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations. Woodward.

INGENUOUS. adj. [from ingenuus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble.

Many speeches there are of Job's, whereby his wisdom and other virtues may appear; but the glory of an ingenuous mind he hath purchased by these words only, Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument: yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed. Hooker.

Infusing into their young breasts such an ingenuous and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned. Milton on Education.

If an ingenuous detection of this shameful vice be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Locke.

2. Freeborn; not of servile extraction.

Subjection, as it preserves property, peace, and safety, so it will diminish rights nor ingenuous liberties. K. Charles.

INGENUOUSLY. adv. [from ingenuus.] Openly; fairly; candidly; generously.

ING

INGENUOUSLY I speak,
No blame belongs to thee.

It was a notable observation of a wise father, and no less ingenuously confessed, that those which held and persuaded preference of consciences were commonly interested. Bacon.

I will ingenuously confess, that the helps were taken from divines of the church of England. Dryden.

INGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from ingenuus.] Openness; fairness; candour.

INGENY. n. f. [from ingenium, Lat.] Genius; wit. Not in use.

Whatever of the production of his ingeny comes into foreign parts, is highly valued. Boyle.

TO INGEST. v. a. [from ingestus, Lat.] To throw into the stomach.

Nor will we affirm that iron, ingested, receiveth in the belly of the overfledge no alteration. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,

Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackm.

INGESTION. n. f. [from ingest.] The act of throwing into the stomach.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimension, which is performed by the daily ingestion of milk and other food, that's in a short time after digested into blood. Harvey.

INGLOARIOUS. adj. [from inglorius, Latin.] Void of honour; mean; without glory.

Left fear return them back to Egypt, chusing inglorious life with servitude. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

It was never held inglorious or derogatory for a king to be guided by his great council, nor dishonourable for subjects to yield and bow to their king. Howell.

Yet though our army brought not conquest home,

I did not from the fight inglorious come. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

INGLOARIOUSLY. adv. [from inglorious.] With ignominy; with want of glory.

This ease the chief o'ercome,

Replenish'd not ingloriously at home. Pope.

INGOT. n. f. [from ingot, French; or from ingoten, melted, Dut.] A mass of metal.

Some others were new driven, and dissent

Into great ingots, and to wedges square. Fairy Queen.

If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;

For like an ass, whose back's with ingots bound,

Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,

And death unloadeth thee. Shakesp. Merch. for Meas.

Within the circle arms and tripods lie,

Ingots of gold and silver heap'd on high. Dryden's Æn.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.

TO INGRAFT. v. a. [in and graft.]

1. To propagate trees by infusion.

Nor are the ways alike in all

How to ingraft, how to inoculate. May's Virg. Georg.

2. To plant the sprig of one tree in the stock of another.

3. To plant any thing not native.

All his works on me,

Good or not good, ingrafts my merits those

Shall perfect, and for those alone. Milton.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;

This fellow would ingraft a foreign name

Upon our stock. Dryden.

4. To fix deep; to settle.

For a spur of diligence, we have a natural thirst after knowledge ingrafted in us. Hooker.

'Tis great pity that the noble Moor

Should hazard such a place as his own second,

With one of an ingraft infirmity. Shakesp. Othello.

Ingraffed love he bears to Caesar. Shakesp. Jul. Cesar.

INGRAFTMENT. n. f. [from ingraft.]

1. The act of ingrafting.

2. The sprig ingrafted.

INGRA'VE. adj. [from ingratus, Latin; ingrat, French.]

INGRA'VEFUL. adj. [from ingratus, Latin; ingrat, French.]

1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,

Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

And you degen'rate, you ingrate revolve,

You bloody Neros. Shakesp.

So will fall

He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?

Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me

All he could have: I made him just and right,

Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall. Milt. Par. Lof.

Words! which no ear ever to hear in heav'n

Expected; least of all from thee, ingrate! Milt. Par. Lof.

Perfidious and ingrate!

His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is pleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight. Bacon's Natural History.

He gives no ingrateful food.

TO INGRA'VE. v. a. [in and gratia, Lat.] To put in favour; to recommend to kindness. Thofe

INH

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such ingratiations with the people. King Charles.

Their managers turn water into blood for them, make them see armies in the air, and give them their word, the more to ingratiate themselves with them, that they signify nothing less than future slaughter and desolation. Addison.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spektor, N. 479.

INGRATITUDE. n. f. [from ingratus, French; in and gratitude.]

1. Retribution of evil for good; unthankfulness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,

More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,

Than the sea monster. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Estrange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd,

In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;

One joy possess'd 'em both, and in one grief they mourn'd. Dryden.

INGREDIENT. n. f. [from ingredient, French; ingrediens, Latin.]

Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardest to come by is the mofs upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 998.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,

Ev'n to the inmost feat of mental fight,

That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,

Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.

By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton's Opticks.

I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison's Guard. N. 155.

Parts, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a publick character. Rogers's Sermons.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbutnot on Aliments.

INGRESS. n. f. [from ingres, French; ingressus, Latin.] Entrance; power of entrance.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body; either by ingress of the substance of the ambient body into the body putrefied; or else by excitation of the body putrefied by the body ambient. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 836.

Those air-bladders, by a sudden subsidence, meet again by the ingress and egress of the air. Arbutnot on Aliments.

INGRESSION. n. f. [from ingressio, French; ingressio, Lat.] The act of entering.

The fire would strain the pores of the glass too suddenly, and break it all in pieces to get ingression. Digby on Bodies.

INGUINAL. adj. [from ingui, French; inguen, Lat.] Belonging to the groin.

The plague seems to be a particular disease, characterized with eruptions in buboes, by the inflammation and suppuration of the axillary, inguinal, and other glands. Arbutnot.

TO INGU'VE. v. a. [in and gulf.]

1. To swallow up in a vast profundity.

A river large

Pas'd underneath ingulph'd. Milton.

The river flows redundant;

Then rowling back, in his capacious lap

Ingulphs their whole militia, quick immerst. Phlips.

2. To cast into a gulf.

If we adjoin to the lords, whether they prevail or not, we ingulf ourselves into assured danger. Hayward.

Cast out from God, falls

Into utter darkness deep ingulph'd. Milton.

TO INGU'RGATE. v. a. [from ingurgit, Latin.] To swallow down.

INGURGITATION. n. f. [from ingurgitatio.] Voracity.

INGUSTABLE. adj. [in and gust, Lat.] Not perceptible by the taste.

As for their taste, if the camelion's nutriment be air, neither can the tongue be an instrument thereof; for the body of the element is ingustable, void of all sapidity, and without any action of the tongue, is, by the rough artery, or wizen, conducted into the lungs. Brown's Vulg. Errours, b. iii.

INHABILE. adj. [from inhabilis, French; inhabilis, Lat.] Unfit; unready; unfit; unequalled.

TO INHABIT. v. a. [from inhabit, Latin.] To dwell in; to hold as a dweller.

They say, wild beasts inhabit here;
But grief and wrong secure my fear. Waller.

INHABITABLE. adj. [from inhabit.]

1. Capable of affording habitation.

The fixed stars are all of them suns, with systems of inhabitable planets moving about them. Locke.

2. [Inhabitable, French.] Incapable of inhabitants; not habitable; uninhabitable. Not in use.

The frozen ridges of the Alps,

Or any other ground inhabitable. Shakespeare's Richard II.

INHABITANCE. n. f. [from inhabit.] Residence of dwellers.

So the ruins yet resting in the wild moors, testify a former inhabitation. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

INHABITANT. n. f. [from inhabit.] Dweller; one that lives or resides in a place.

In this place they report that they saw inhabitants, which were very fair and fat people. Abbot.

If the fervour of the sun were the sole cause of blackness in any land of negroes, it were also reasonable that inhabitants of the same latitude; subjected unto the same vicinity of the sun, should also partake of the same hue. Brown.

For his supposed love a third

Lays greedy hold upon a bird,

And stands amaz'd to find his dear

A wild inhabitant of th' air. Waller.

What happier natures shrink at with affright,

The hard inhabitant contends is right. Pope.

INHABITATION. n. f. [from inhabit.]

1. Habitation; place of dwelling.

INH

- Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shak. As you like it.
 Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,
 Which with pain purchas'd doth inherit pain. Shakespeare.
 Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, sterile land, manured with excellent good store of fertile therris. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Mat.
 The son can receive from him the portion of good things, and advantages of education naturally due to him, without pire, that was vested in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke.
 We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it, and inherit it from him. Locke.
 Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inherit- ing, he formed delays. Addison's Spect. N^o. 198.
 2. To possess; to obtain possession of: in Shakespeare.
 He, that had wit, would think that I had none,
 To bury so much gold under a tree,
 And never after to inherit it. Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus.
INHERITABLE. adj. [from inherit.] Transmissible by inheritance; obtainable by succession.
 A kind of inheritable estate accrued unto them. Carew.
 By the ancient laws of the realm, they were not inherit- able to him by descent. Hayward.
 Was the power the same, and from the same original in Moses as it was in David? And was it inheritable in one and not in the other? Locke.
INHERITANCE. n. f. [from inherit.]
 1. Patrimony; hereditary possession.
 In the book of Numbers it is writ,
 When the son dies let the inheritance
 Descend unto the daughter. Shakespeare's Henry V.
 Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house. Gen. xxxi. 14. Milton.
 Claim our just inheritance of old.
 Oh dear, unhappy babe! must I bequeath thee
 Only a sad inheritance of woe?
 Gods! cruel gods! can't all my pains atone,
 Unless they reach my infant's guiltless head? Smith.
 2. In Shakespeare, possession.
 You will rather shew our general lows
 How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
 For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
 Of what that want might ruin. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
 3. The reception of possession by hereditary right.
 Men are not proprietors of what they have merely for themselves, their children have a title to part of it, which comes to be wholly theirs, when death has put an end to their parents use of it; and this we call inheritance. Locke.
INHERITOR. n. f. [from inherit.] An heir; one who receives any thing by succession.
 You, like a lather, out of whorish loins,
 Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shakespeare.
 The sole inheritor
 Of all perfections that a man may owe. Shakespeare.
 The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? Shakespeare.
 Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they must it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents inheritance. Bacon's New Atlantis.

 isting in something else.
 To INHIBIT. v. a. [in hibeo, Lat. inhibere, French.]
 1. To restrain; to hinder; to repress; to check.
 Holding of the breath doth help somewhat to cease the hiccough; and vinegar put to the nostrils or gargarised doth it also, for that it is astringent, and inhibeth the motion of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N^o. 686.
 The stars and planets being whirled about with great velocity, would suddenly, did nothing inhibit it, be shattered in pieces.
 Their motions also are excited and inhibited, are moderated and managed, by the objects without them. Bentley's Scrm.
 2. To prohibit; to forbid.
 All men were inhibited by proclamation, at the dissolution, so much as to mention a parliament. Clarendon.

INI

- Burial may not be inhibited or denied to any one. Asht.
INHIBITION. n. f. [inhibition, Fr. inhibition, Latin.]
 1. Prohibition; embargo.
 He might be judged to have imposed an envious inhibition on it, because himself has not stock enough to maintain the trade. Government of the Tongue, f. 7.
 2. [In law.]
Inhibition is a writ to inhibit or forbid a judge from farther proceeding in the cause depending before him. Inhibition is most commonly a writ issuing out of a higher court Christian to a lower and inferior, upon an appeal; and prohibition out of the king's court to a court Christian, or to an inferior temporal court. Cowell.
 To INHOLD. v. a. [in and hold.] To have inherent; to contain in itself.
 It is disputed, whether this light first created be the same which the sun inholdeth and casteth forth, or whether it had continuance any longer than till the sun's creation. Raleigh.
INHOSPITABLE. adj. [in and hospitable.] Affording no kindness nor entertainment to strangers.
 All places else

 courtesy to strangers.
INHUMAN. adj. [in humanus, Fr. inhumanus, Latin.] Barbarous; savage; cruel; uncompassionate.
 A just war may be persecuted after a very unjust manner;
 by perfidious breaches of our word, by inhuman cruelties, and by assassinations. Atterbury's Sermon.
 The more these praises were enlarged, the more inhuman was the punishment, and the sufferer more innocent.
 Princes and peers attend! while we impart
 To you the thoughts of no inhuman heart. Pope's Odyssey.
INHUMANITY. n. f. [in humanitas, French; from inhuman.]
 Cruelty; savageness; barbarity.
 Banished
 Her mind, beams, state, far from thy weak twigs,
 And love with lower hurts is inhumanity. Sidney, b. i.
 The rudeness of those who must make up their want of justice with inhumanity and impudence. King Charles.
 Each social feeling fell,
 And joyless inhumanity pervades,
 And petrifies the heart. Thomson's Spring, l. 305.
INHUMANLY. adv. [from inhuman.] Savagely; cruelly; bar-barously.
 O what are these
 Death's ministers, not men: who thus deal death
Inhumanly to men; and multiply
 Ten thousand fold the sin of him who flew
 His brother. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
 I, who have established the whole system of all true politeness and refinement in conversation, think myself most in- humanly treated by my countrymen.
 To INHUMATE. v. a. [in humus, French; humus, Lat.] To instrument, into any part of the body. Quincy.

 3. The act of filling the vessels with wax, or any other proper matter, to shew their shapes and ramifications, often done by anatomists. Quincy.
INIMITABILITY. n. f. [from inimitable.] Incapacity to be imitated.
 Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.
INIMITABLE. adj. [inimitabilis, Latin; inimitable, French.]
 Above imitation; not to be copied.
 The portal shone, inimitable on earth
 By model, or by shading pencil drawn. Milton.
 What is most excellent is most inimitable. Denham.

INJ

- And imitate the inimitable force. Dryden.
 Virgil copied this circumstance from the ancient sculptors, in that inimitable description of military fury in the temple of Adonis on ancient Medals.
INIMITABLY. adv. [from inimitable.] In a manner not to be imitated; to a degree of excellence above imitation.
 A man could not have been always blind who thus inimita- bly copies nature. Pope's Essay on Homer.
 Thus terribly adorn'd the figures shine,
Inimitably wrought with skill divine. Pope.
 Charms such as thine, inimitably great. Broome.
 To INJOIN. v. a. [in joindre, French; injungo, Latin.]
 1. To command; to enforce by authority. See ENJOIN.
 Laws do not only teach what is good, but they injoin it;
 they have in them a certain constraining force. Hooker, b. i.
 This garden tend, our pleasant talk injoin'd. Milton.
 2. In Shakespeare, to join.
 The Ottomites
 Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes,
 Have there injoin'd them with a fleet. Shakespeare.

INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Lat. from inocula.]

1. Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone-fruit, and upon oranges and jasmines. In order to perform it, be provided with a sharp pen-knife, having a flat haft, and some sound bafs-mat. Having taken off the cuttings from the trees you would propagate, chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock with the flat haft of your pen-knife clear to the wood, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock, cutting off any part of the rind belonging to the bud which may be too long; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round with bafs-mat, beginning at the under part of the slit, and so proceed to the top, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. The March following cut off the stock three inches above the bud, sloping it, that the wet may pass off: to this part of the stock, above the bud, fasten the shoot which proceeds from the bud, and which would be in danger of being blown out; but this must continue no longer than one year, after which it must be cut off close above the bud, that the stock may be covered thereby. Milcr.

INO

In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Hovel.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease. Arbutn.

INOCULATOR. n. f. [from inocula.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators. Friend's Hist. of Physick.

INODORATE. adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured. Bacon's Natural History.

INODOROUS. adj. [inodorus, Latin.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscous, unactive, insipid, inodorous liquor. Arbutn on Aliments.

INOFFENSIVE. adj. [in and effensus.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking. Fleetwood.

However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors. Roger's Sermons.

2. Giving no pain; causing no terror.

Should infants have taken offence at any thing, diverting their thoughts, or mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, 'till it be grown inoffensive to them. Le.

3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive moist. Milton.

With whate'er gall thou set'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never bite. Dryden.

Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,
Gives signs of gratulation. Phillips.

4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction. A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad,
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hell. Milton's Paradi. Lost.

INOFFENSIVELY. adv. [from inoffensive.] Without appearance of harm; without harm.

INOFFENSIVENESS. n. f. [from inoffensive.] Harmlessness; freedom from appearance of harm.

INORDINACY. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; disorder.

It is safer to use inordination.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation. Government of the Tongue.

INORDINATE. adj. [in and ordinatus, Latin.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people at first were wisely brought to acknowledge allegiance to the kings of England; but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught. Spenser on Ireland.

Thence raise
At last distemp'rd, discontented thoughts;
Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits engend'ring pride. Milton.

From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unquietness of spirit. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

INORDINATELY. adv. [from inordinate.] Irregularly; not rightly.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently disquieted in himself. Taylor.

INORDINATENESS. n. f. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

INORDINATION. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from right.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philosophy to clear a lye from that intrinsic inordination and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lye was absolutely and universally sinful. South's Sermons.

INORGANICAL. adj. [in and organical.] Void of organs or instrumental parts.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganic parts of matter. Locke.

TO INOSCULATE. v. n. [in and osculum, Lat.] To unite by apposition or contact.

The almost infinite ramifications and inosculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. QUEST.

INQ

INQUEST. n. f. [enqueste, French; inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial enquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them is given in? Atterbury's Sermons.

2. [In law] The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal, in our realm; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff for the purpose, and as they bring in their verdict so judgment passes: for the judge faith, the jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. Covel.

3. Enquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science. South's Sermons.

INQUIETUDE. n. f. [inquietude, Fr. inquietudo, inquietus, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther inquietude. Watson.

Iron, that has stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude and discontentment 'till it attain the former position. Watson.

The youthful hero, with returning light,
Rose anxious from th' inquietudes of night. Pope's Odyssey.

TO INQUINATE. v. a. [inquino, Latin.] To pollute; to corrupt.

An old opinion it was, that the ibis feeding upon serpents, that venomous food so inquinates their oval conceptions, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes. Brown.

INQUINATION. n. f. [inquinati, Lat. from inquinare.] Corruption; pollution.

Their causes and axioms are so full of imagination, and so infected with the old received theories, as they are mere inquinations of experience, and concoct it not. Bacon.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called by some of the ancients inquinatio, or incoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

INQUIRABLE. adj. [from inquire.] That of which inquisition or inquest may be made.

TO INQUIRE. v. n. [inquire, French; inquire, Latin.]

1. To ask questions; to make search; to exert curiosity on any occasion.

You have oft inquir'd
After the shepherd that complain'd of love. Shakespeare.

Inquire for one Saul of Tarsus. Acts ix. 11.

You sent Hadoram to king David, to inquire of his welfare. Chron. xviii. 10.

It is a subject of a very noble inquiry, to inquire of the more subtle perceptions; for it is another key to open nature, as well as the house. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It may deserve our best skill to inquire into those rules, by which we may guide our judgment. South's Sermons.

The step-dame poison for the son prepares;
The son inquires into his father's years. Dryden.

Under their grateful shade Æneas sat;
His left young Pallas kept, fix'd to his side,
And oft of winds inquir'd, and of the tide. Dryd. Æn.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under a guide that will mislead them, than he that is likelier to be prevailed on to inquire after the right way. Locke.

To those who inquired about me, my lover would answer, that I was an old dependent upon his family. Swift.

2. To make examination.

Awful Rhadamanthus rules the state;
He hears and judges each committed crime,
Inquires into the manner, place, and time. Dryden's Æn.

TO INQUIRE. v. a.

1. To ask about; to seek out: as, he inquired the way.

2. To call; to name. Obsolete.

Canute had his portion from the rest,
The which he call'd Canutium, for his hire,
Now Canutium, which Kent we commonly inquire. F. Qu.

INQUIRER. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Searcher; examiner; one curious and inquisitive.

What satisfaction may be obtained from those violent disputers, and eager inquirers in what day of the month the world began? Brown's Vulgar Errours.

What's good doth open to th' inquirers stand,
And itself offers to th' accepting hand. Denham.

Superficial inquirers may satisfy themselves that the parts of matter are united by muscles, nerves, and other like ligaments. Glauv. Scelf.

This is a question only of inquirers, not disputers, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine. Locke.

INQ

Late inquirers by their glasses find,

That ev'ry insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, chear'd by the solar rays,
Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmore.

2. One who interrogates; one who questions.

INQUIRY. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Interrogation; search by question.

The men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate. Acts x. 17.

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controversies about truth. Locke.

As to the inquiry about liberty, I think the question is not proper, whether the will be free, but whether a man be free. Locke.

I have been engaged in physical inquiries.

It is a real inquiry, concerning the nature of a bird, or a bat, to make their yet imperfect ideas of it more complete. Locke.

Judgment or opinion, in a remoter sense, may be called invention: as when a judge or a physician makes an exact inquiry into any cause. Grew's Cofmol. Sac.

INQUISITION. n. f. [inquisition, Fr. inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry.

When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the humble. Pf. ix. 12.

We were willing to make a pattern or precedent of an exact inquisition. Bacon's Natural History.

With much severity, and strict inquisition, were punished the adherents and aiders of the late rebels. Bacon's Hen. VII.

T'ough it may be impossible to recollect every failing, yet you are so far to exercise an inquisition upon yourself, as, by observing lesser particulars, you may the better discover what the corruption of your nature sways you to. Taylor.

By your good leave,
These men will be your judges: we must stand
The inquisition of their railery South.

On our condition.

2. Examination; discussion.

When inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out. 2 Efb. xxiii.

3. [In law.] A manner of proceeding in matters criminal, by the office of the judge. Covel.

4. The court established in some countries subject to the pope for the detection of heresy.

One kiss of her's, and but eighteen words,
Put quite down the Spanish inquisition. Corbet.

INQUISITIVE. adj. [inquisitus, Latin.] Curious; busy in search; active to pry into any thing. With about, after, into, or of, and sometimes into.

My boy at eighteen years became inquisitive
After his brother. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errours.

This idleness, together with fear of imminent mischiefs, have been the cause that the Irish were ever the most inquisitive people after news of any nation in the world. Davies.

He is not inquisitive into the reasonableness of indifferent and innocent commands. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

It can be no duty to write his heart upon his forehead, and to give all the inquisitive and malicious world a survey of those thoughts, which is the prerogative of God only to know. South.

His old shaking fire,
Inquisitive of fights, still longs in vain
To find him in the number of the slain. Dryden's Juu.

Thou, what befits the new lord-mayor,
And what the Gallick arms will do,
Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

A Dutch ambassador, entertaining the king of Siam with the particularities of Holland, which he was inquisitive after, told him that the water would, in cold weather, be so hard that men walked upon it. Locke.

The whole neighbourhood grew inquisitive after my name and character. Addison's Spectator.

A wife man is not inquisitive about things impertinent.

They cannot bear with the impertinent questions of a young inquisitive and sprightly genius. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

INQUISITIVELY. adv. [from inquisitive.] With curiosity; with narrow scrutiny.

INQUISITIVENESS. n. f. [from inquisitive.] Curiosity; diligence to pry into things hidden.

Though he thought inquisitiveness an uncomely guest, he could not but ask who she was. Sidney.

Heights that scorn our prospect, and depths in which reason will never touch the bottom, yet surely the pleasure arising from thence is great and noble; for as much as they afford perpetual matter to the inquisitiveness of human reason, and so are large enough for it to take its full scope and range in. South.

Providence, delivering great conclusions to us, designed to excite our curiosity and inquisitiveness after the methods by which things were brought to pass. Barnet.

Curiosity in children nature has provided, to remove that ignorance they were born with; which, without this busy inquisitiveness, will make them dull. Locke.

INQUISITOR

INQUISITOR. n. f. [inquisitor, Latin; inquisiteur, French.]

1. One who examines judicially.
In these particulars I have played myself the inquisitor, and find nothing contrary to religion or manners, but rather medicinal. Bacon's Essays.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes with his affections hears. Dryden.

2. An officer in the popish courts of inquisition.
To INRAIL. v. a. [in and rail.] To inclose with rails.

In things indifferent, what the whole church doth think convenient for the whole, the same if any part do wilfully violate, it may be reformed and inrailed again, by that general authority whereunto each particular is subject. Hooker.

Where fam'd St. Giles's ancient limits spread,
An inrailed column rears its lofty head;
Here to sev'n streets sev'n dials count the day,
And from each other catch the circling ray. Gay.

INROAD. n. f. [in and road.] Incurfion; sudden and desultory invasion.

Many hot inroads
They make in Italy. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

From Scotland we have had in former times some alarms,
And inroads into the northern parts of this kingdom. Bacon.

By proof we feel
Our pow'r sufficient to disturb his heav'n,
And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
Though inaccessible his fatal throne. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The loss of Shrewsbury expos'd all North Wales to the daily inroads of the enemy. Clarendon.

The country open lay without defence;
For poets frequent inroads there had made. Dryden.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insanabilis, Latin.] Incurable; irremediable.

INSAUR. adj. [insanus, Latin.] Mad; making mad.

Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten of the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insatiabilis, Latin; insatiable, French.] Greedy beyond measure; greedy so as not to be satisfied.

INSAURABLENESS. n. f. [from insatiable.] Greediness not to be appeased.

Some mens hydropick insatiableness had learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

INSAURABLY. adv. [from insatiable.] With greediness not to be appeased.

They were extremely ambitious, and insatiably covetous; and therefore no impression, from argument or miracles, could reach them. South.

INSAURATE. adj. [insatiatus, Latin.] Greedy so as not to be satisfied.

When my mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had wars in France. Shakespeare, R. III.

Insatiate to pursue
Vain war with heav'n. Milton.

Too oft has pride,
And hellish discord, and insatiate thirst
Of others rights, our quiet dispos'd. Phillips.

INSAURIFICATION. n. f. [in and satisfaction.] Want; unsatisfied state.

It is a profound contemplation in nature, to consider of the emptiness or insatisfaction of several bodies, and of their appetite to take in others. Bacon's Natural History.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insaturabilis, Latin.] Not to be glutted; not to be filled.

To INSCRIBE. v. a. [inscribo, Latin; inscribere, French.]

1. To write on any thing. It is generally applied to something written on a monument, or on the outside of something.

In all you write to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, ego & rex meus
Was still inscribed. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Connatural principles are in themselves highly reasonable, and deducible by a strong process of ratiocination to be most true; and consequently the high exercise of ratiocination might convince their truth, though there were no such originally inscribed in the mind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Ye weeping loves! the stream with myrtles hide,
And with your golden darts, now useless grown,
Inscribe a verse on this relenting stone. Pope.

2. To mark any thing with writing: as, I inscribed the stone with my name.

3. To assign to a patron without a formal dedication.
One ode, which pleas'd me in the reading, I have attempted to translate in Pindarick verse: 'tis that which is inscribed to the present earl of Rochester. Dryden.

4. To draw a figure within another.
In the circle inscribe a square. Notes to Creech's Manilius.

INSCRIPTION. n. f. [inscriptio, Fr. inscriptio, Latin.]

1. Something written or engraved.

This avarice of praise in time to come,
Those long inscriptions crowded on the tomb. Dryden.

2. Title.

Joubertus by the same title led our expectation, whereby we reaped no advantage, it answering scarce at all the promise of the inscription. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. [In law.] Is an obligation made in writing, whereby the accuser binds himself to undergo the same punishment, if he shall not prove the crime which he objects to the party accused in his accusatory libel, as the defendant himself ought to suffer, if the same be proved. Ayliffe's Paragon.

4. Consignment of a book to a patron without a formal dedication.

INSCRUTABLE. adj. [inscrutabilis, Lat. inscrutable, Fr.] Unsearchable; not to be traced out by inquiry or study.

A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a weather-cock on a steeple. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

This king had a large heart, inscrutable for good, and was wholly bent to make his kingdom and people happy. Bacon.

O how inscrutable his equity
Twins with his power. Sandys.

Hereunto they have recourse as unto the oracle of life, the great determinator of virginity, conception, fertility, and the inscrutable infirmities of the whole body. Brown's Vulg. Err.

We should contemplate reverently the works of nature and grace, the inscrutable ways of providence, and all the wonderful methods of God's dealing with men. Atterbury.

To INSCULP. v. a. [insculpo, Latin.] To engrave; to cut.

A coin that bears the figure of an angel
Stamp'd in gold, but that insculps upon. Shakespeare.

INSCULPTURE. n. f. [from in and sculpture.] Any thing engraved.

Timon is dead,
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' th' sea;
And on the grave-stone this insculpture, which
With wax I brought away. Shakespeare, Timon.

It was usual to wear rings on either hand; but when precious gems and rich insculptures were added, the custom of wearing them was translated unto the left. Brown.

To INSEAM. v. a. [in and seam.] To impress or mark by a seam or cicatrix.

Deep o'er his knee inseam'd remain'd the scar. Pope.

INSECT. n. f. [insecta, Latin.]

1. Insects may be considered together as one great tribe of animals: they are called insects from a separation in the middle of their bodies, whereby they are cut into two parts, which are joined together by a small ligature, as we see in wasps and common flies.

Beast, bird, insect, or worm, durst enter none. Milton.

2. Any thing small or contemptible.

In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd
The kings, and awful fathers of mankind;
And some with whom compar'd, your insect tribes
Are but the beings of a Summer's day,
Have held the scale of empire. Thomson's Spring.

INSECTOR. n. f. [from insector, Latin.] One that persecutes or harasses with pursuit.

INSECTILE. adj. [from insect.] Having the nature of insects: insectile animals, for want of blood, run all out into legs. Bacon.

INSECTOLOGER. n. f. [insect and logos.] One who studies or describes insects.

The insect itself is, according to modern insectologers, of the ichneumon-fly kind. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INSECURE. adj. [in and secure.]

1. Not secure; not confident of safety.

He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life, and is continually insecure not only of the good things of this life, but even of life itself. Tilletson's Sermon.

2. Not safe.

INSECURITY. n. f. [in and security.]

1. Uncertainty; want of reasonable confidence.

It may be easily perceived with what insecurity of truth we ascribe effects, depending upon the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown.

2. Want of safety; danger; hazard.

The unreasonableness and presumption, the danger and desperate insecurity of those that have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition and contrition, sorrow, and resolution of amendment. Hammond.

INSEMINATION. n. f. [insemination, Fr. inseminatio, Lat.] The act of scattering seed on ground.

INSECUTION. n. f. [insecutio, Fr. insecutio, Lat.] Pursuit. Not in use.

Not the king's own horse got more before the wheel
Of his rich chariot, that might still the insecution feel,
With the extreme hairs of his tail. Chapman's Iliad.

INSENSATE. adj. [insense, French; insensate, Italian.] Stupid; wanting thought; wanting sensibility.

Ye be reprobrates; obdurate insensate creatures. Hammond.

So fond are mortal men,
As their own ruin on themselves 't invite,
Insensate left, or to sense reprobate,
And with blindness internal struck. Milton's Agonist.

INSENSIBILITY.

INSENSIBILITY. n. f. [insensibilitas, French, from insensible.]

1. Inability to perceive.

Insensibility of slow motions may be thus accounted for: motion cannot be perceived without perception of the parts of space which it left, and those which it next acquires. Glanv.

2. Stupidity; dulness of mental perception.

3. Torpor; dulness of corporal sense.

INSENSIBLE. adj. [insensible, French.]

1. Imperceptible; not discoverable by the senses.

What is honour? a word. What is that word honour? What is a trim reckoning. Who hath it? he that died a Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible then? yes, to the dead: but will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it. Shakespeare.

Two small and almost insensible pricks were found upon Cleopatra's arm.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton's Opt.

2. Slowly gradual.

They fall away,
And languish with insensible decay. Dryden.

3. Void of feeling either mental or corporal.

I thought
I then was passing to my former state
Insensible, and forthwith to dissolve. Milton.

4. Void of emotion or affection.

You grow insensible to the conveniency of riches, the delights of honour and praise. Temple.

You render mankind insensible to their beauties, and have destroyed the empire of love. Dryden.

INSENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from insensible.] Absence of perception; inability to perceive.

The insensibleness of the pain proceeds rather from the relaxation of the nerves than their obstruction. Ray.

INSENSIBLY. adv. [from insensible.]

1. Imperceptibly; in such a manner as is not discovered by the senses.

The planet earth, so steadfast though she seem,
Insensibly three different motions moves. Milton, Par. Lost.

The hills rise insensibly, and leave the eye a vast uninterrupted prospect. Addison on Italy.

2. By slow degrees.

Equal they were form'd,
Save what fin hath impair'd, which yet hath wrought Insensibly. Milton.

Proposals agreeable to our passions will insensibly prevail upon our weakness. Rogers's Sermons.

Insensibly came on her side. Swift.

3. Without mental or corporal sense.

INSEPARABILITY. n. f. [from inseparable.] The quality of INSEPARABLENESS. being such as cannot be severed or divided.

The parts of pure space are immovable, which follows from their inseparability, motion being nothing but change of distance between any two things; but this cannot be between parts that are inseparable.

INSEPARABLE. adj. [inseparable, French; inseparabilis, Latin.] Not to be disjoined; united so as not to be parted.

Ancient times figure both the incorporation and inseparable conjunction of counsel with kings, and the wife and politic use of counsel by kings. Bacon.

Thou, my shade,
Inseparable, must with me along;
For death from sin no pow'r can separate. Milton, Par. Lost.

Care and toil came into the world with sin, and remain ever since inseparable from it.

No body feels pain, that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

The parts of pure space are inseparable one from the other, so that the continuity cannot be separated, neither really nor mentally. Locke.

Together out they fly,
Inseparable now the truth and lie;
And this or that unmixt no mortal ear shall find. Pope.

INSEPARABLY. adv. [from inseparable.] With indissoluble union.

Drowning of metal is, when the baser metal is so incorporate with the more rich as it cannot be separated; as if silver should be inseparably incorporated with gold. Bacon.

Him thou shalt enjoy,
Inseparably thine. Milton.

Athetics must confess, that before that assigned period matter had exist'd eternally, inseparably endued with this principle of attraction; and yet had never attracted nor convened before, during that infinite duration. Bentley's Sermons.

To INSERT. v. a. [inserere, Fr. inserere, Latin.] To place in or amongst other things.

Those words were very weakly inserted, where they are so liable to misconstruction. Stillingfleet.

With the worthy gentleman's name I will insert it at length in one of my papers. Addison.

It is the editor's interest to insert what the author's judgment had rejected. Swift.

Poetry and oratory omit things essential, and insert little beautiful digressions, in order to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

INSERTION. n. f. [insertio, Fr. insertio, Latin.]

1. The act of placing any thing in or among other matter.

The great disadvantage our historians labour under is too tedious an interruption, by the insertion of records in their narration. Felton on the Chafficks.

An ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is either a circumvolution or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The thing inserted.

He softens the relation by such insertion, before he describes the event. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

To INSERTIVE. v. a. [insertive, Latin.] To be of use to an end.

INSERTIVENT. adj. [insertivus, Latin.] Conducive; of use to an end.

The providence of God, which disposeth of no part in vain, where there is no digestion to be made, makes not any parts insertive to that intention. Brown.

To INSHELL. v. a. [in and shell.] To hide in a shell.

And more instinct of love and loyalty
Makes them thus forward in his banishment. Shakep. Measure for Measure.

Thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince: instinct is a great matter. I was a coward on instinct: I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thee for a true prince. Shakep. Henry IV. p. i.

But providence or instinct of nature seems,
Or reason though disturb'd, and scarce consulted,
To have guided me aright. Milton's Agonist. l. 1545.

Nature first pointed out my Portius to me,
And easily taught me by her secret force
To love thy person, e'er I knew thy merit;
Till what was instinct grew up into friendship. Addison.

The philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs.
Instinct and reason how shall we divide? Prior.

Reason serves when press'd;
But honest instinct comes a volunteer. Pope.

INSTINCTED. adj. [instinctus, Lat.] Impressed as an animating power. This, neither musical nor proper, was perhaps introduced by Bentley.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instinct through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer and a worse editor could not hinder from shining forth. Bentley's Preface to Milton.

INSTINCTIVE. adj. [from instinct.] Acting without the application of choice of reason; rising in the mind without apparent cause.

You have ten thousand instructors in Christ.

After the flood arts to Chaldea fell,

The father of the faithful there did dwell,

Who both their parent and instructor was.

O thou, who future things can't represent

As present, heav'nly instructor!

Poets, the first instructors of mankind,

Brought all things to their native proper use.

They see how they are beset on every side, not only with temptations, but instructors to vice.

We have precepts of duty given us by our instructors.

Several instructors were disposed among this little helpless people.

INSTRUCTION. n. f. [from instru, Latin; instruere, French.]

1. The act of teaching; information.

Not by your own instructions, nor by any matter

Which your heart prompts you to, but with such words

As are beclouded to judicious writers of all ages, for those discoveries and discourses they have left behind them for our instruction.

2. Precepts conveying knowledge.

Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to receive my words?

On ev'ry thorn delightful wisdom grows,

In ev'ry stream a sweet instruction flows;

But some untaught o'erhear the whispering rill,

In spite of sacred leisure, blockheads still.

3. Authoritative information; mandate.

See this dispatch'd with all the haste thou can't;

Anon I'll give thee more instruction.

INSTRUCTIVE. adj. [from instru, Latin; instruere, French.]

 And yet your beards forbid me to interpret
 That you are so. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He hanged the chief baker, as Joseph had interpreted to them. Gen. xl. 22.

Pharaoh told them his dream; but there was none that could interpret them unto him. Gen. xli. 8.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, and understanding, interpreting of dreams, and shewing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same Daniel. Dan. v. 12.

Hear his sighs, though mute!
 Unskillful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

INTERPRETABLE. adj. [from interpret.] Capable of being expounded or deciphered.

No man's face is actionable: these singularities are interpretable from more innocent causes. Collier.

INTERPRETATION. n. f. [interpretation, Fr. interpretatio, Lat. from interpret.]

1. The act of interpreting; explanation.

This is a poor epitome of your's,
 Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
 May shew like all yourself. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Look how we can, or fid or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks. Shakespeare's H. IV.

2. The sense given by an interpreter; expolition.

If it be obscure or uncertain what they meant, charity, I hope, constraineth no man, which standeth doubtful of their minds, to lean to the hardest and worst interpretation that their words can carry. Hooker.

The primitive Christians knew how the Jews, who preceded our Saviour, interpreted these predictions, and the marks by which the Messiah would be discovered; and how the Jewish doctors, who succeeded him, deviated from the interpretations of their forefathers. Addison.

3. The power of explaining.

We beseech thee to prosper this great sign, and to give us the interpretation and use of it in mercy. Bacon.

INTERPRETATIVE. adj. [from interpret.] Collected by interpretation.

Though the creed apostolick were sufficient, yet when the church hath erected that additional bulwork against hereticks, the rejecting their additions may justly be deemed an interpretative siding with heresies. Hammond.

INTERPRETATIVELY. adv. [from interpretative.] As may be collected by interpretation.

By this provision the Almighty interpretatively speaks to him in this manner: I have now placed thee in a well furnished world. Ray on the Creation.

INTERPRETER. n. f. [interprete, Fr. interpret, Latin.]

1. An explainer; an expositor; an expounder.

What we oft do best,
 By sick interpreters, or weak ones, is
 Not ours, or not allow'd: what worst, as oft,
 Hitting a grosser quality, is cry'd up
 For our best act. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

In the beginning the earth was without form and void; a fluid, dark, confused mafs, and so it is understood by interpreters, both Hebrew and Christian. Burnet.

We think most mens actions to be the interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

2. A translator.

Nor word for word be careful to translat,
 With the same faith as an interpreter. Fanfhaw.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit, when he considers that in an age or two he shall hardly be understood without an interpreter. Swift.

This motion of the heavenly bodies seems partly uninterrupted, as that of the first moveable interpolated and interrupted.

2. To hinder one from proceeding by interposition.

Answer not before thou hast heard the cause; neither interrupt men in the midst of their talk.

3. To divide; to separate.

Scelt thou what rage
Transports our adversary, whom no bounds,
Nor yet the main abyss wide interrupt, can hold.

INTERRUPTEDLY. adv. [from interrupted.] Not in continuity; not without stoppages.

The incident light that meets with a grosser liquor, will have its beams either refracted or imbibed, or else reflected more or less interruptedly than they would be, if the body had been unmoistened.

INTERRUPTER. n. f. [from interrupt.] He who interrupts.

INTERUPTION. n. f. [interruptio, Fr. interruptio, Latin.]

1. Interposition; breach of continuity.

Places severed from the continent by the interruption of the sea.

2. Intervention; interposition.

You are to touch the one as soon as you have given a stroke of the pencil to the other, lest the interruption of time cause you to lose the idea of one part.

3. Hindrance; stop; let; obstruction.

Bloody England into England gone,
O'erbearing interruption, spite of France.

INTERUPTION. n. f. [interruptio, Fr. interruptio, Latin.]

TO INTERSECT. v. a. [interseco, Lat.] To cut; to divide each other mutually.

Perfect and viviparous quadrupeds so stand in their position of proneness, that the opposite joints of neighbourless consist in the same plane; and a line descending from their navel intersects at right angles the axis of the earth.

Excited by a vigorous loadstone, it will somewhat deprecise its animated extreme, and intersect the horizontal circumference.

TO INTERSECT. v. n. To meet and cross each other.

The sagittal suture usually begins at that point where these lines intersect.

INTERSECTION. n. f. [intersectio, Lat. from intersect.] Point where lines cross each other.

They did spout over interchangeably from side to side in forms of arches, without any intersection or meeting aloft, because the pipes were not opposite.

The first star of Aries, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection, which is now elongated, and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees.

Ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter, when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross ones.

TO INTERSECT. v. a. [interseco, Lat.] To put in between other things.

If I may insert a short philosophical speculation, the depth of the sea is determined in Pliny to be fifteen furlongs.

INTERSEKTION. n. f. [from intersect.] An insertion, or thing inserted between any thing.

These two interpositions were clear explications of the apostle's old form, God the father, ruler of all, which contained an acknowledgement of the unity.

TO INTERSPERSE. v. a. [interspersus, Lat.] To scatter here and there among other things.

The possibility of a body's moving into a void space beyond the utmost bounds of body, as well as into a void space interspersed amongst bodies, will always remain clear.

It is the editor's interest to insert what the author's judgment had rejected; and care is taken to intersperse these additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought without purchasing something unworthy of the author.

INTERSPERSION. n. f. [from intersperse.] The act of scattering here and there.

For want of the interspersing of now and then an elegiac or a lyric ode.

INTERSTELLAR. adj. [inter and stellar, Lat.] Intervening between the stars.

The interstellar sky hath so much affinity with the star, that there is a rotation of that as well as of the star.

INTERSTITIAL. n. f. [interstitium, Lat. interstitium, Latin.]

1. Space between one thing and another.

The sun shining through a large prism upon a comb placed immediately behind the prism, his light, which passed through the interstices of the teeth fell upon a white paper: the breaths of the teeth were equal to their interstices, and seven teeth together with their interstices took up an inch in breadth.

The force of the fluid will separate the smallest particles which compose the fibres, so as to leave vacant interstices in those places where they cohered before.

2. Time between one act and another.

I will point out the interstices of time which ought to be between one citation and another.

INTERSTITIAL. adj. [from interstitium.] Containing interstices.

In oiled papers, the interstitial division being actuated by the accession of oil, becometh more transparent.

INTERTEXTURE. n. f. [intertextus, Latin.] Diversification of things mingled or woven one among another.

TO INTERTWINE. v. a. [inter and twine, or twiss.] To unite by twisting one in another.

Under some concurrence of shades,
Whole branching arms thick intertwined might shield
From dews and damps of night his flatter'd head.

INT

INTERVAL. n. f. [intervalle, Fr. intervallum, Latin.]

1. Space between places; interstice; vacancy; space unoccupied; void place; vacancy; vacant space.

With any obstacle let all the light be now stopped which passes through any one interval of the teeth, so that the range of colours which comes from thence may be taken away, and you will see the light of the rest of the ranges to be expanded into the place of the range taken away, and there to be coloured.

2. Time passing between two assignable points.

The century and half following, to the end of the third Punic war, was a very busy period at Rome; the intervals between every war being so short.

3. Remission of a delirium or distemper.

Though he had a long illness, considering the great heat with which it raged, yet his intervals of sense being few and short, left but little room for the offices of devotion.

TO INTERVENE. v. n. [intervenio, Lat. intervenire, Fr.] To come between things or persons; to be intercepted; to make intervals.

While so near each other thus all day
Our talk we chafe, what wonder, if so near,
Looks intervene, and smiles.

15teen the danger of an action, and the possibilities of miscarriage, and every cross accident that can intervene, to be either a mercy on God's part, or a fault on ours.

INTERVENUE. n. f. [from the verb.] Opposition, or perhaps interview. A word out of use.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an intervene of graces, both vehement on the parts which they sway.

INTERVENIENT. adj. [intervenientis, Lat. intervenient, French.] Intercedent; interposed; passing between.

There be intervenient in the rise of eight, in tones, two bemolls or half notes.

Many arts were used to discuss new affection: all which notwithstanding, for I omit things intervenient, there is conveyed to Mr. Villiers an intimation of the king's pleasure to be sworn his servant.

INTERVENTION. n. f. [interventio, Fr. interventio, Latin.]

1. Agency between persons.

God will judge the world in righteousness by the intervention of the man Christ Jesus, who is the Saviour as well as the judge of the world.

2. Agency between antecedents and consequents.

In the dispensation of God's mercies to the world, some things he does by himself, others by the intervention of natural means, and by the mediation of such instruments as he has appointed.

3. Interposition; the state of being interposed.

Sound is shut out by the intervention of that lax membrane, and not suffered to pass into the inward ear.

TO INTERVERT. v. a. [intervo, Lat.] To turn to another course.

The duke interverted the bargain, and gave the poor widow of Epernius for the books five hundred pounds.

INTERVIEW. n. f. [entrevue, French.] Mutual sight; sight of each other. It is commonly used for a formal and appointed meeting or conference.

The day will come, when the passions of former enmity being allayed, we shall with ten times redoubled tokens of reconciled love shew ourselves each towards other the same, which Joseph and the brethren of Joseph were at the time of their interview in Egypt.

His fears were, that the interview betwixt England and France might, through their amity, breed him some prejudice.

Such happy interview, and fair event
Of love, and youth not lost, songs, garlands, flow'rs,
And charming symphonies, attach'd the heart
Of Adam.

TO INTERVOLVE. v. a. [intervolvus, Latin.] To involve one within another.

Mystical dance! which yonder starry sphere
Of planets, and of fix'd, in all her wheels
Resembles nearest; mazes intricate,
Eccentric, intervolved, yet regular,
Then most, when most irregular, they seem.

TO INTERWEAVE. v. a. preter. interwove, part. pass. interwoven, interwove, or interwoven. [inter and weave.] To mix one with another in a regular texture; to intermingle.

Then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert night
Of trees thick interwoven.

Words interwove with sighs found out their way.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With blushing honeyfuckle.

Can say here nature ends, and art begins,
But mixt like th' elements, and born like twins,

INT

So interwoven'd, so like, so much the same:
None, this mere nature, that mere art can name.

The proud theatres disclose the scene,
Which interwoven Britons seem to raise,
And show the triumph which their shame displays.

He so interweaves truth with probable fiction, that he puts a pleasing fallacy upon us.

It appeared a vast ocean planted with islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little shining seas that ran among them.

It is a confusion of kitchen and parterre, orchard and flower-garden, which lie so mixt and interwoven with one another, as to look like a natural wilderness.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ardent desire, interwoven in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being reunited with himself.

I do not altogether disapprove the interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon.

TO INTERWISH. v. a. [inter and wish.] To wish mutually to each other.

The venom of all stepdames, gamester's gall,
What tyrants and their subjects interwish,
All ill fall on that man.

INTERSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Latin.] Disqualified to make a will.

A person excommunicated is rendered infamous and interstable both actively and passively.

INTERSTATE. adj. [instat, Fr. instatus, Latin.] Wanting a will; dying without will.

Why should calamity be full of words?
—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airy succeders of intestine joys,

Poor breathing orators of milerics.

Present punishment pursues his maw,
When forfeited and swell'd, the peacock raw,
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, intestine death.

INTESTINAL. adj. [intestinal, Fr. from intestine.] Belonging to the guts.

The mouths of the lacteals are opened by the intestinal tube, affecting a straight instead of a spiral cylinder.

1. Internal; inward; not external.

Of these inward and intestine enemies to prayer, there are our past sins to wound us, our present cares to distract us, our disordered passions to disorder us, and a whole swarm of loose and floating imaginations to molest us.

Intestine war no more our passions wage,
Ev'n giddy factions hear away their rage.

2. Contained in the body.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
And moon-struck madnes.

A wooden jack, which had almost Lost, by disuse, the art to roast,
A sudden alteration feels,
Increas'd by new intestine wheels.

3. Domestick, not foreign. I know not whether the word be properly used in the following example of Shakespeare: perhaps for mortal and intestine should be read mortal intestine.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns.

But God, or Nature, while they thus contend,
To these intestine discords put an end.

She saw her sons with purple deaths expire,
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest fears.

INTESTINE. n. f. [intestinum, Lat. intestine, Fr.] The gut; the bowel: most commonly without a singular.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by an acrid substance taken inwardly.

TO INTHRALL. v. a. [in and thrall.] To enslave; to shackle; to reduce to servitude. A word now seldom used, at least in prose.

What though I be inthrall'd, he seems a knight,
And will not any way dishonour me.

The Turk has sought to extinguish the ancient memory of those people which he has subjected and inthrall'd.

Authors to themselves in all
Both what they judge, and what they choose; for so I form'd them free, and free they must remain
Till they inthrall themselves.

She soothes, but never can inthrall my mind:
Why may not peace and love for once be join'd.

INTHRALMENT. n. f. [from inthrall.] Servitude; slavery.

Moses and Aaron, sent from God to claim
His people from inthrallment, they return
With glory, and spoil, back to their promis'd land.

 It is in our power to confine our friendships and intimacies to men of virtue. Rogers's Sermons.
 INTIMATE. adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Lat.]
 1. Inmost; inward; intestine.
 They knew not
 That what I mention'd was of God, I knew
 From intimate impulse, and therefore urged on
 The marriage. Milton's Agonist, l. 221.
 Fear being to intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws. Tillotson's Sermons.
 2. Near; not kept at distance.
 Moses was with him, in the retirements of the mount, received there his private instructions; and when the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission. South's Sermons.
 3. Familiar; closely acquainted.
 United by this sympathick bond,
 You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Rowe's Common.
 INTIMATE. n. f. [intimado, Spanish; intime, French; intimus, Latin.] A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.
 The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, assign him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with his as did the outward form. Gov. Tongue.
 TO INTIMATE. v. a. [intimer, French; intimare, low Latin.] To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly.
 Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intimates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green. Boyle.
 The names of simple ideas and substances, with the abstract ideas in the mind, intimate some real existence, from which was derived their original pattern. Locke.
 'Tis the divinity that flirs within us;
 'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
 And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.
 INTIMATELY. adv. [from intimate.]
 1. Closely; with intermixture of parts.
 The same economy is observed in the circulation of the chyle with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be assimilated. Arbutnot.
 2. Nearly; inseparably.
 Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us, and more intimately united with us. Addison's Spect. N. 219.
 3. Familiarly; with close friendship.
 INTIMATION. n. f. [intimation, Fr. from intimate.] Hint; oblique or indirect declaration or direction.
 Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations; the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in his heart. South's Sermons.
 Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty. Woodward.
 Besides the more solid parts of learnings, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals. Addison.
 INTIME. adj. Inward; being within the mafs; not being external, or on the surface; internal.
 As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water hath the principality and excess over earth. Digby on Bodies.
 TO INTIMIDATE. v. a. [intimider, French; in and timidus, Lat.] To make fearful; to daunt; to make cowardly.
 Now guilt once harbour'd in the conscious breast, Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irene.
 INTIRE. n. f. [integer, Lat. entier, French; better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.] Whole; undiminished; broken.
 The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politick societies of men, belongeth so properly unto the same intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Hooker.
 INTIRENESS. n. f. [from intire; better entireness.] Wholeness; integrity.
 So shall all times find me the same:
 You this intireness better may fulfil,
 Who have the pattern with you still. Donne.
 INTO. prep. [in and to.]
 1. Noting entrance with regard to place.
 If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the site it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature.
 To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul. Locke.

 Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, must irritate them into greater contraction. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.
 To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an ungenerous act. Pope.
 3. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.
 They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon.
 Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.
 A man must in himself into a love of other mens sins; for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South.
 Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
 When the mad people rise against the state,
 To look them into duty; and command
 An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden's Tervus.
 It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.
 He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smalridge.
 In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison on Italy.
 It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass. Woodward.
 Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue. Atterbury.
 It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening and astonishing men into an acknowledgement of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury's Sermon.
 A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.
 INTOLEABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat. intolerable, Fr.]
 1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.
 If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. Taylor.
 His awful presence did the crowd surprize,
 Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
 Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
 So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.
 Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady.
 From Param's top th' Almighty rode, Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Broom.
 2. Bad beyond sufferance.
 INTOLEABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.
 INTOLEABLY. adv. [from intolerable.] To a degree beyond endurance.
 INTOLEANT. adj. [intolerant, French.] Not enduring; not able to endure.
 Too great moisture affects human bodies with one class of diseases, and too great dryness with another; the powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses. Arbutnot.
 TO INTOMB. v. a. [in and tomb.] To inclose in a funeral monument; to bury.
 What commandment finally had they for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead, after which custom notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intomb'd. Hooker, b. i.
 Is't night's predominance or the day's shame,
 That darkness does the face of earth intomb. Shakespeare.
 Mighty hero's more majestic shades,
 And youths intomb'd before their father's eyes. Dryden.
 TO INTONATE. v. a. [inteno, Lat.] To thunder. Dis.
 INTONATION. n. f. [intonation, Fr. from intonate.] The act of thundering. Dis.
 TO INTOSE. v. u. [from intons, or rather from tone; intoner, French.] To make a slow protracted noise.
 So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to a storm.
 Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii.
 TO INTOART. v. a. [intortus, Lat.] To twist; to wreathe; to wring.
 The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits; and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Arbutnot.
 With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold,
 Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.
 To

INT

TO INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Latin.] To inebriate; to make drunk.
 The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicates; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.
 As with new wine intoxicated both,
 They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
 Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
 My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
 That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
 Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.
 What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equall'd, it not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots? Decay of Piety.
 Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden's Duffessy.
 Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having quite different qualities from the plant itself; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbutnot.
 INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicare.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.
 That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.
 Whence can this proceed, but from that besotting intoxication which verbal magic brings upon the mind. South.
 INTRACTABLE. n. f. [intractabilis, Lat. intractable, Fr.]
 1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.
 To love them who loves us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.
 2. Unmanageable; furious.
 By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iii.
 INTRACTABLENESS. n. f. [from intractable.] Obstinacy; perverseness.
 INTRACTABLY. adv. [from intractable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.
 INTRACTABILITY. n. f. [in and tranquility.] Unquietness; want of rest.
 Jaletions were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intractability which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.
 INTRANSITIVE. v. a. [intransitivus, Latin.]
 [In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curre, I run. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
 INTRANSUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabile.] Unchangeable to any other substance.
 Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray on the Creation.
 TO INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.
 There is a history in all mens lives,
 Figuring the nature of the times decess'd;
 The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
 With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
 And weak beginnings he intresured. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
 TO INTRENCH. v. u. [in and trencher, French.]
 1. To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another.
 Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. K. Charles.
 That crawling insect, who from mud began,
 Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
 Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
 Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden's Aureng.
 We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.
 2. To break with hollows.
 His face
 Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
 Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
 3. To fortify with a trench; as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.
 INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained by one of his editors: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hammer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

INT

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
 With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.
 INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.
 INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Latin.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.
 Argyle
 Calm and intrepid in the very throat
 Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field. Thomson.
 INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.
 I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver's Travels.
 INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.
 He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.
 INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricare.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.
 The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.
 INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Lat.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.
 Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.
 His stile in writing was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.
 TO INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken.
 Not proper, nor in use.
 Alterations of surnames have so intricately, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.
 INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.
 That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.
 INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.
 He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.
 INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, French.]
 1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.
 These are the grand intrigues of man,
 These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatman.
 A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison's Gurr.
 The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.
 Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
 And marriage grown a money league. Swift's Miscel.
 2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.
 Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale's Originat. of Mankind.
 3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.
 As these causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.
 TO INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs.
 INTRIGUER. n. f. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who buies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who peruses women.
 I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.
 INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.
 INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, French.] This word is now generally written intrinsecal, contrarily to etymology.
 1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.
 These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.
 The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley's Sermons.
 2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.
 He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage, and gave him rather encouragement to woo fortune in court. Watson.
 Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Watson.
 INTRINSECALLY.

INT

INTRINSICALLY. adv. [from intrinsecus.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsecally evil. South.
Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsecally and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, it cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley's Sermons.

INTRINSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsecal goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing. The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsecal; this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd, The more shall its intrinsecal worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsecal value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers's Sermons.

INTRINSECATE. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled.

Such smiling rogues as these, Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain, Too intrinsecate 'em unloose. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Come, mortal wretch, With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate Of life at once unloose. Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

TO INTRODUCE. v. a. [introduco, Lat. introducere, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person. Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice. This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Brown.

3. To produce; to give occasion. Whosoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke on Education.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives. INTRODUCER. n. f. [introducens, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person. The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introducens, Fr. introducens, Latin.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice. The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter. INTRODUCTIVE. adj. [introducens, Fr. from introduce.]

Serving as the means to something else. The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great instrumental introducens art, that must guide the mind into the former. South's Sermons.

INTRODUCTORY. adj. [from introducens, Latin.] Previous; serving as a means to something further. This introducens discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book. Boyle.

INTROGRESSION. n. f. [introgressio, Latin.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTROIT. n. f. [introitus, French.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of public devotions.

INTROMISSION. n. f. [intromissio, Latin.]

1. The act of sending in. If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shows to be absurd. Peacock on Drawing.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

INT

2. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects: as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.

TO INTROMIT. v. a. [intromitto, Latin.] To tend in; to let in; to admit; to allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

Glass in the window intromits light without cold to those in the room. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intromit or transmit other sorts. Newton's Opt.

TO INTROSPECT. v. a. [introspectus, Latin.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPECTION. n. f. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actions of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man. Hale's Origin of Man.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Byden.

INTROVENER. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introvent nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO INTROUDE. v. n. [introduo, Latin.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission. Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge And manners, to introduce where I am grac'd. Shakspeare.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to introduce, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. South.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship introdues on your repose, and comes thus late To greet you with the tidings of success. Rowe's Fa. Sh.

2. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted. Some thoughts rise and introduce upon us, while we thus them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. Watts.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, introducing into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. Col. ii. 18.

TO INTROUDE. v. a. To force without right or welcome. Not to introduce one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds that up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Pope.

INTROUDER. n. f. [from introduce.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

And the hounds Should drive upon the new transformed limbs, Unmannerly introduer as thou art! Shakspeare, Titus Andronicus.

Go, base introduer / over-weening slave! Bellow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakspeare.

They were but introduers upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Davies on Ireland.

Will you, a bold introduer, never learn To know your basket, and your bread discern? Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and introduers, such as she had no acquaintance with. Locke.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new introduer into the world of fame. Addison's Freetholder.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introducens, French; introducens, Latin.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state. It must raise more substantial superfluities, and fall upon very many excellent strains, which have been justly off by the introduers of poetical fictions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the introduction of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission. I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned introduction; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakspeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill With loath'd introduction. Milton's Paradise Lost.

How's this, my son? Why this introduction? Were not my orders that I should be private? Addison's Cato.

I may clofe, after so long an introduction upon your meditations. Wake's Preparation for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing. It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with introduction and impertinency. Wotton.

TO INTROUST. v. a. [intro and truff.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value.

Never

INV

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were introduced with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move; Dryden's Juven.
Introduce thy fortune to those, who draw the sword

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword? Addison's Cato.
In Rome's defence, introduced to our care? Addison's Cato.

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to introduce it to the hands of his confidant. Arbutnot.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introducens, French; introducens, Latin.]

1. Sight of any thing. Used commonly of mental view; immediate knowledge. At our rate of judging, St. Paul had surely passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that introduction had mercy on him. Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple introduction of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object. All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple introduction, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is inferrible. Glanville's Scrup.

Discursive was then almost as quick as introduction. South.

He their single virtues did survey, By introduction in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of reason. Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Those lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstract notions, those exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one and the same person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing. Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hosker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination. The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hosker.

The soul receives Discursive or intuitive. Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivus, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception. That our love is found and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all mens hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his. Hosker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUMESCENCE. n. f. [intumescens, French; intumescens, Lat.]

INTUMESCENCY. n. f. Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling. According to the temper of the terrene parts at the bottom, as they are more hardy or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescencies. Brown.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and at the same time making the like effort upon the earth, occasions an earthquake. Woodward's Nat. History.

INTURGESCENCE. n. f. [in and turgescere, Latin.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling. Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. Brown's Vulgar Err.

INTUSE. n. f. [intusus, Latin.] Bruise. To INTWINE. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twilt, or wreath together. This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them. Hosker.

2. To compass by circling round it. The vest and veil divine, Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs intwine. Dryden.

TO INVAD. v. a. [invado, Latin.]

1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance. He will invade them with troops. Hab. iii. 16.

Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms. Kneller.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton.

They race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome; Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade, Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden's Æn.

INV

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wife command Divide the waters from the land, If daring ships, and men prophane, Dryden.

Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault. There shall he felition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esdr. xv. 16.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm Invades us to the skin; 'tis to thee: But where the greater malady is fix'd, The lesser is scarce felt. Shakspeare, King Lear.

3. To violate with the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend. Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made; And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

INVADER. n. f. [from invado, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another. The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety In sharp contest of battle found no aid Against invaders. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.

Were he lost, the naked empire Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Denham's Sophy.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand; Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join, To call the fair invader in; My darling favourite inclination, too, All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant. 3. Encroacher; intruder. The substance thereof was formerly comprised in that un-compounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

INVALESCENCE. n. f. [invalesco, Latin.] Strength; health; force. Diet.

INVALID. adj. [invalidus, Fr. invalidus, Latin.] Weak; of no weight or cogency. But this I urge, Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton.

TO INVALIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy. To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alledged. Boyle.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the fallhood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

INVALID. n. f. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts. What beggar in the invalids, With lameness broke, with blindness smitten, Wilt'd ever decently to die? Prior.

INVALIDITY. n. f. [in and validity; invalidité, French.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency. 2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning. He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want. Temple.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gaping nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the desarts that their swords had made. Arbutnot.

INVECTIVE. n. f. [invektive, Fr. invektiva, low Lat.] A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.
Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of Christian duty. Hosker.

So desyrate thieves, all hopeles of their lives,
Breathe out invektives 'gainst the officers. Shakep. H. VI.

Casting off the respect fit to be continued between kings, even when their blood is hotted, he fell to bitter invektives against the French king. Bacon's H. VII.

Whil't we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the word, for an invektive, 'tis certain that 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryd. Juv. Dedication.

INVECTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.
Let him rail on; let his invektive muse
Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVECTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.
Thus most invektively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yea and of this our life; swearing that we Are meer usurpers, tyrants. Shakep. H. VI.

By their count, which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains. Spektor.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none
She could devise, and thousand ways invent. Fa. Queen.

To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment. Fa. Queen.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of mischief. Ana vi. 5.

We may invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies. Milton.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Roy.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace,
By manag'd fire and late invented eyes. Blackmore.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech.

The ship by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Arbutnot.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.
I never did such things as these men have maliciously invented against me. Sufon. xliii.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sense of the words. Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate. Shakep. H. VI.

As lean-fac'd envy in her lothsome cave.
Hercules's meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawning of philosophy. Addison's Spectator.

4. To light on; to meet with.
Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus's merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Spenser.

INVENTER. n. f. [from inventer, French.]
1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.
As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich. Garrh.

2. A forger.
INVENTION. n. f. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

INV

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintained,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white involvements figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you till translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war? Shak. H. IV.

INVE'TERACY, n. f. [inveteratus, Latin.]

INVIO'LABLE, adj. [inviolabile, French; inviolabilis, Latin.]
1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.
Thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep This place inviolable, and these from harm. Milt. Par. Lost.
In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade the inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overlap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.
Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!
Inviolable powers! ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden's Æn.
'This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and inviolable. Locke.

His fortune of arms was still inviolate. Bacon's H. VII.
But let involute truth be always dear
To thee; even before friendship, truth prefer. Denham.
If the past
Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which though I
Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd involute:
I beg thy pardon. Denham's Sophy.
My love your claim involute secures;
'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden's Aureng.
In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like heav'n's, was kept involute. Dryden.
INVIOUS, adj. [invisus, Latin.] Impassable; untrodden.
If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue invious ways can prove,
What may not he confide to do,
That brings both love and virtue too. Hudibras.
INVISI'BLE, n. f. [invisibilis, Fr. invisibile, Latin.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibleness to sight.

INU'NDATION, n. f. [inundatio, French; inundatio, Latin.]
1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says Covely, implies less than deluge.
Her father counts it dangerous,
That she should give her sorrow so much way;
And in his wisdom hastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shak. Rom. and Juliet.
The same inundation was not past forty foot in most places; so that although it destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.
All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
This inundation upon the Egyptians happeneth when it is winter upon the Ethiopians. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods, and inundations near.
The hero next assail'd proud Doway's head,
And spite of confluent inundations spread
With unexampled valour did succeed. Blackmore.

INV

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish; were utterly wasted. Spenser.
TO INVO'CAT, v. a. [invoco, Latin.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invoke his aid
With solemnest devotion. Milton's Agonistes.
Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
'Till vermin or the draff of servile food
Consume me, and oft invoked death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton's Agonistes.
INVO'CATI'ON, n. f. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]
1. The act of calling upon in prayer.
Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cause, as I suppose, but to shew that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hooker.
2. The form of calling for the assistance or presence of any being.
My invocation is Honest and fair, and in his mistress's name. Shakespeare.
The proposition of Gracius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Wase.

One death involves Tyrants and slaves. Thompson's Summer.
5. To intangle.
This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from helping at all, that it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.
As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle mens reason. Locke.
6. To complicate; to make intricate.
Some involved their snaky folds. Milton.
Syllogism is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to shew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses. Locke.
7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.
Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton.
INVO'LUNTARILV, adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice; not spontaneously.
INVOLUNTARY, adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin; involuntaire, French.]
1. Not having the power of choice.
The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confess. Dunciad, b. iv.
2. Not chosen; not done willingly.
The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.

JO'LTHEAD. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A great head; a dolt; a blockhead.
Fie on thee, jolthead, thou can'st not read. Shakespeare.
Had he been a dwarf, he had scarce been a reasonable creature; for he must then have either had a jolthead, and so there would not have been body and blood enough to supply his brain with spirits; or he must have had a small head, and so there would not have been brain enough for his business. Grew.

JOURNAL. n. f. [journal, French.] A species of daffodil.
The flowers of this plant, of which there are single and double kinds, are greatly esteemed for their strong sweet scent, though few ladies can bear the smell of them, it being so powerful as to overcome their spirits. Miller.

Nor gradual bloom is wanting,
Nor hyacinths of pure virgin white,
Low bent and blushing inward; nor jonquilles
Of potent fragrance. Thomson's Spring.

JORDEN. n. f. [gors, stercur, and ben, receptaculum.] A pot.
They will allow us ne'er a jorden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamberly breeds fleas like a loach. Shak.
This China jorden let the chief o'ercome
Replenish, not ingloriously at home. Pope's Dunciad.

The copper-pot can boil milk, heat porridge, hold small beer, or, in case of necessity, serve for a jorden. Swift.

JO'. n. f. [lwtz.] A point; a tittle; the least quantity of signable.

As superfluous flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot. Fa. Queen.

Go, Eros, send his treasure after, do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopat.
Let me not stay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakespeare.
This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heav'n. Shakespeare.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh. Shakespeare.
I argue not Against heav'n's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
Of heart or hope; but still bear up and steer Right onward. Milton.

You might, with every jot as much justice, hang me up, because I'm old, as beat me because I'm impotent. L'Esclavage.
A man may read the discourses of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge. Locke.

The final event will not be one jot less the consequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreseen and determined what that event shall be. Rogers.

JO'VIAL. adj. [jovial, French; jovialis, Latin.]
1. Under the influence of Jupiter.
The fixed stars are astrologically differenced by the planets, and are esteemed martial or jovial, according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. Gay; airy; merry.
My lord, seek o'er your rugged looks,
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests. Shakespeare. Macb.
Our jovial star reign'd at his birth. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

Some men, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company, into which they come, to be sad and ill-disposed; and contrariwise, others of a jovial nature dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon's Natural History.

His odes are some of them panegyric, others moral, the rest jovial or bacchanalian.
Perhaps the jest that charm'd the sprightly crowd,
And made the jovial table laugh so loud,
To some false notion ow'd its poor pretence. Prior.

JO'VIALLY. adv. [from jovial.] Merrily; gaily.
JO'VIALNESS. n. f. [from jovial.] Gaiety; merriment.
JO'VISCANCE. n. f. [joissance, French.] Jollity; merriment; festivity.

Colin, my dear, when shall it please thee sing,
As thou wert wont, songs of some joissance;
Thy muse too long slumbereth in forrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser.

JO'URNAL. adj. [journal, French; giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of use.
Now 'gan the golden Phœbus for to sleep
His fiery face in billows of the West,
And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilst from their journal labours they did rest. Fa. Queen.

Ere twice the sun has made his journal greeting
To th' under generation, you shall find Your safety manifested. Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas.
So sick I am not, yet I am not well;
But not so citizen a wanton, as
To seem to die ere sick; so, please you, leave me:
Stick to your journal course; the breach of custom
Is breach of all. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

JO'URNAL. n. f. [journal, French; giornale, Italian.]
1. A diary; an account kept of daily transactions.
Edward kept a most judicious journal of all the principal passages of the affairs of his estate. Hayward on Edw. I.

2. Any paper published daily.
JO'URNALIST. n. f. [from journal.] A writer of journals.

JO'URNEY. n. f. [journee, French.]
1. The travel of a day.
When Duncan is asleep,
Whereto the rather shall this day's hard journey
Soundly invite him. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey.
2. Travel by land; a voyage or travel by sea.
So are the horses of the enemy,
In general journey bated and brought low. Shakespeare. H. IV.

Before the light of the gospel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain prospect of the end of their journey, or of the way that led to it. Rogers.

He for the promis'd journey bids prepare
The smooth hair'd horses and the rapid car. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Passage from place to place.
Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

JOY

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou do'st thy radiant journies run,
Through every distant climate own,
That in fair Albion thou hast seen.
The greatest prince, the brightest queen.
To JOURNIEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to pass from place to place.

Gentlemen of good esteem
Are *journiey*ing to salute the emperor.
We are *journiey*ing unto the place, of which the Lord said,
I will give it you.
Make the two trumpets, that thou mayest use them for the *journiey*ing of the camps.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journiey down the hill;
Not panting after growing beauties, so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go.
I have *journiey*d this morning, and it is now the heat of the day; and therefore your lordship's discourses had need content my ears very well, to make them intreat my eyes to keep open.

Over the tent a cloud
Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night,
Save when they journiey.
Having heated his body by *journiey*ing, he took cold upon the ground.
JOURNIEYMAN. n. f. [journiee, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman.

They were called journieymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by statute it be extended to those likewise that convenient to work in their occupation with another by the year.

Players have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journieymen had made men, and not made them well.

I intend to work for the court myself, and will have journiey- men under me to furnish the rest of the nation.
Say's Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the management of the young lord's business into his hands: in that case what must become of us and our families? We must starve or turn journieymen to old Lewis Baboon.

JOURNIEYWORK. n. f. [journiee, French, and work.] Work performed for hire.

See how your soldier wears his cage
Of iron, like the captive Turk,
And as the guerdon of his rage!

See how your glimmering peers do lurk,
Or at the best work journieywork.

Did no committee sit, where he Might cut out journieywork for thee?
And set thee a task with subornation,
To stitch up false and fequestration.

Her family she was forced to hire out at journieywork to her neighbours.

JOUST. n. f. [joust, French.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight.
It is now written less properly joust.

Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament.

To JOUST. v. n. [jouster, French.] To run in the tilt.
All who since

Jousted in Alpramont or Montalhan.

JO'VUL. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from bevaler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader.] A kind of hunting dog or beagle.

See him drag his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled: jovuler lugs him still

Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill.

JO'VTER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from joviter.]
Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jovuters.

JOY. n. f. [joye, French; gioia, Italian.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul.

2. Gaiety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound;
And hymen, to hymen, rung around.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish.

Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table.

JOY

Almeyda smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest.

The bride,
Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a star, and took her place:
Her heav'nly form beheld, all with'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy,
Although our last, yet not our least young love,
What say you?

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits,
And mirth in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy.

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become.

He will joy over thee with singing.
I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament.
No man imparteth his joys to his friends, but he joins the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the less.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ, that conquer'd hell, shall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love.

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee this paradise,
And thy fair Eve.

Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's flav'ry they are free.

To JOY. v. a.
1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.
Like us they love or hate; like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.
She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister.

My soul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rous'd the raging main.

3. [Jouir de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession.
Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love.

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with this.

Th' usurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown.

JOYANCE. n. f. [jeant, old French.] Gaiety; festivity.
Bring home with you the glory of her gain;
With joyance bring her, and with jollity.

There him rests in riotous suffiance,
Of all his gladfulness and kingly joyance.

JOYFUL. adj. [joyful, and full.]
1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.
They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart.

My soul shall be joyful in my God.
2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.
Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With fails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life.

JOYFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.
If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to flee:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the fates stood by.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of to a glorious immortality, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it.

JOYFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.
Thou servest not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things.

JOYLESS. adj. [from joy.]
1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.
A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless.

IRE

With down-cast eyes the joyless victor sat;
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.
With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest:
Forlakes his food, and pining for the lass,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass.

3. Giving no pleasure.
A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad.

Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd.

Casual fruition.
The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyful possession.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him.

JOYOUS. adj. [joyeux, French.]
1. Glad; gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my faller friend did no less joyous deem.

Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs
Whisper'd it.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature stung, renew their love.
Fast by her flow'ry bank the fons of Arcas, Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect
Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave.

2. Giving joy.
They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dauncing round.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should gudge our happy end, and wish it theirs.

IRECAUA'KHA. n. f. [An Indian plant.]
Irecuamba is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One fort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, which is brought from Peru: the other fort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown, or blackish colour on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasilis.

The grey ought to be preferred in medicinal use, because the brown, being stronger, is apt to operate more roughly.

Irecuamba was in the middle of the last century first brought into Europe, and became celebrated for the cure of dysenteries, a virtue discovered in it by the Indians; but after a few years it sunk into oblivion, being given in two large doses.

IRASCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascible, French.]
Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the conspicuous distractions the crasis of the liver.

I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties.

IRE. n. f. [ira, Latin.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.
She lik'd not his desire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not stake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son.

The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;

Me! me! only just object of his ire.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
'Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire.

IRIS. adj. [iris and ful.] Angry; raging; furious.
The irish bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd.

By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the irish arm
Of unrelenting Clifford.

There learn'd this maid of arms the irish guise.
In midst of all the dome misfortune sat,
And gloomy discontent and fell debate,
And madness laughing in his irish mood.

IRISFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

IRIS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.
Beside the solar iris, which God shewed unto Noah, there is another lunar, whose efficient is the moon.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.
When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10'; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.
Iris all hues, roses and jessamine.

To IRK. v. a. [yrk, work, Islandick.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mibi pama est, it gives me pain; or,
I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence say, iradet, it irketh.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd.

IRKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.
I know she is an irksome brawling scold.

Since that thou can't talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure.

Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, 'till his great chief return.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd.

'Tis here is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body.

IRKSOMELY. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.

IRKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

IRON. n. f. [haiarn, Welsh; irren, iren, Saxon; iern, Erse.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world, plentiful in most of a small price, though superior in real value to the dearest. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable, but in a less degree than gold, silver, lead, or copper: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, in which it is called cast iron, it is scarce malleable; and the most ductile iron, heated and suddenly quenched in cold water, loses much of this quality. Iron is more capable of rust than any other metal, is very sonorous, and requires the strongest fire of all the metals to melt it, and is with difficulty amalgamated with mercury. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. It consists of a vitriolic salt, a vitrifiable earth, and a peculiar bituminous matter. The specific gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone.

Iron is not only soluble in all the stronger acids, but even in common water. Pure iron has been found in some places but very rarely. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.

If he finite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die,
he is a murderer.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a load-stone, and a power to be so drawn is a part of that of iron.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other.

There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean.

Iron stone lies in strata.

I treated of making iron work, and steel work in general.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries.

His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons.
Can't thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears?

For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around?

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.
The iron entered into his soul.

IRON. adj.
1. Made of iron.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shakeſp. H. VI.
Get me an iron crow, and bring it ſtraight Unto my cell. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.
Some are of an iron red, ſhining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron duſt. Woodward.
Poll-cats and weefels do a great deal of injury to warrens:
the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps. Martin.
2. Reſembling iron in colour.
A piece of ſtone of a dark iron grey colour, but in ſome parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward on Foſſils.
Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodw.
3. Harſh; ſevere; rigid; miſerable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardſhip and wickedneſs. Theſe ideas may be found more or leſs in all the following examples.
Three vigorous virgins, waiting ſtill behind,
Aſſiſt the throne of th' iron ſcepter'd king. Craſhaw.
O ſad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the foul of Orpheus ſing
Such notes as warbled to the ſtring,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did ſeek. Milton.
In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a ſtain of diſhonour. Rowe.
Jove cruſh the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the ſcourge of God. Pope's Odeſſey.
4. Indifſoluble; unbroken.
Raſh Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeaſurable bowl, and thought
To exhale his ſuſſer by irriſuous ſleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron ſleep oppreſs. Philippi.
5. Hard; impenetrable.
I will converſe with iron witted fools,
And unſeſſpective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with conſid'rate eyes. Shakeſp. R. III.
To IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To ſmooth with an iron.
2. To ſhackle with irons.
IRONICAL. adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Exprefſing one thing and meaning another; ſpeaking by contraries.
In this fallacy may be comprifed all ironical miſtakes, or exprefſions receiving inverted ſignifications. Brown.
I take all your ironical civilities in a literal ſenſe, and ſhall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.
IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the uſe of irony.
Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wiſeſt man of Greece, which he would turn from himſelf ironically, ſaying, there could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wiſe, and knew it; and others were not wiſe, and knew it not. Bacon.
The dean, ironically grave,
Still ſhunn'd the fool, and laſt'd the knave. Swift.
IRONMONGER. n. ſ. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.
IRONWOOD. n. ſ. A kind of wood extremely hard, and ſo ponderous as to ſink in water. It grows in America. Rob. Cruſo.
IRONWORT. n. ſ. [ideritis, Latin.] It is a plant with a lobed flower, conſiſting of one leaf, whoſe upper lip riſes the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos; which afterword turn to ſo many oblong ſeeds, ſhut up in an huſk, which before was the flower-cup: to theſe marks muſt be added, the flowers growing in whorles at the wings of the leaves, which are cut like a cleft, and differ from the other leaves of the plant. Mill.
IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.
The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary; it is not ſtrange if the irony chains have more ſolidity than the contemplative. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Some ſprings of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick ſalts, diſſolve the body of one metal, ſuppoſe iron, put into the ſpring; and depoſite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward on Foſſils.
IRONY. n. ſ. [ironie, Fr. ironie.] A mode of ſpeech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.
So grave a body, upon ſo ſolemn an occaſion, ſhould not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.
IRRADIANCE. n. ſ. [irradiance, French; irradiatio, Latin.]
IRRADIANCY. n. ſ. [irradiance, French; irradiatio, Latin.]
1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.
The principal affection is its tranſlucency; the irradiancy and ſparkings, found in many gems, is not diſcoverable in this. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Beams of light emitted.
Love not the heav'nly ſpirits? Or do they mix Irradiance! virtual, or immediate touch? Mit. Par. Lg.
To IRRADIANTE. v. a. [irradiare, Latin.]
1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.
When he thus perceives that theſe opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffuſion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

IRR

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; ſuch an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it deſcends. South.
2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.
Celeſtial light
Shine inward, and the mind through all her pow'rs Irradiates; there plant eyes: all miſt from thence Purge and diſperſe. Milton's Paraſiſe Loſt, b. iii.
3. To animate by heat or light.
Ethereal or ſolar heat muſt digeſt, influence, irradiate, and put thoſe more ſimple parts of matter into motion. Hale.
4. To decorate with ſhining ornaments.
No weeping orphan ſaw his father's ſtore
Our ſhrines irradiate, or imblaze the floor. Pope.
IRRADIATION. n. ſ. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiare.]
1. The act of emitting beams of light.
If light were a body it ſhould drive away the air, which is likewiſe a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the whole ſphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby on Bodies.
The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or anſwerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a tranſmiſſion is made materially from ſome parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Illumination; intellectual light.
The means of derivation and immediate union of theſe intellectual objects to the underſtanding, are ſometimes divine and ſupernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation.
Hale's Origin of Manſind.
IRRATIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Latin.]
1. Void of reaſon; void of underſtanding; without the diſcourſive faculty.
Thus began
Outrage from lifeleſs things; but diſcord fiſt,
Daughter of ſin, among th' irrational
Death introduc'd. Milton's Paraſiſe Loſt.
He hath eat'n, and lives,
And knows, and ſpeaks, and reaſons and diſcerns;
Irrational! till then. Aſtit. Paraſiſe Loſt, b. ix.
2. Aſurd; contrary to reaſon.
Since the brain is only a part tranſmittent, and that humours oſt are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from ſo irrational an application. Harvey on Conſumption.
I ſhall quietly ſubmit, not wiſhing ſo irrational a thing as that every body ſhould be deceived. Pope.
IRRATIONALITY. n. ſ. [from irrational.] Want of reaſon.
IRRATIONALLY. adv. [from irrational.] Without reaſon;
aſurdly.
IRRECLAIMABLE. adj. [in and reclaimable.] Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.
As for obſtinate, irreclaimable, profeſſed enemies, we muſt expect their calumnies will continue. Addiſon's Freeholder.
IRRECONCILABLE. adj. [irreconcilable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]
1. Not to be reconciled; not to be appeaſed.
Wage eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand foe. Milton.
A weak unequal faction may animate a government; but when it grows equal in ſtrength, and irreconcilable by animosity, it cannot end without ſome criſis. Timb.
There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you. Dryden.
2. Not to be made conſiſtent. It has with or to.
As he was ſtrictly virtuous herſelf, ſo he always put the beſt conſtruction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honneſty and decency. Arbutnot. Hiſt. of John Bull.
Since the ſenſe I oppoſe is attended with ſuch groſs irreconcilable aſurdities, I preſume I need not offer any thing further in ſupport of the one, or in diſproof of the other. Rogers.
This eſſential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the atheiſt's own doctrine of a chaos. Bentham.
All that can be tranſmitted from the ſtars is wholly unac-countable, and irreconcilable to any ſyſtem of ſcience. Bentham.
IRRECONCILABLENESS. n. ſ. [from irreconcilable.] Impoſſi-bility to be reconciled.
IRRECONCILABLY. adv. [from irreconcilable.] In a manner not admitting reconciliation.

IRRESPECTIVE. adj. [in and respective.] Having no regard to any circumstances.

Thus did the Jew, by persuading himself of his particular irrespective election, think it safe to run into all foul sins. Hammond on Fundamentals.

According to this doctrine, it must be resolved wholly into the absolute irrespective will of God. Rogers's Sermons.

IRRESPECTIVELY. adv. [from irrespective.] Without regard to circumstances.

He is convinced, that all the promises belong to him absolutely and irrespectively. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRRETREIVABLE. adj. [in and retrieve.] Not to be repaired; irrecoverable; irrepairable.

IRRETREIVABLY. adv. [from irretrievable.] Irreparably; irrecoverably.

It would not defray the charge of the extraction, and therefore must have been all irretrievably lost, and useless to mankind, was it not by this means collected. Woodward.

IRREVERENCE. n.f. [irreverentia, Lat. irreverence, Fr. in and reverence.]

1. Want of reverence; want of veneration; want of respect.

Having seen our scandalous irreverence towards God's worship in general, 'tis easy to make application to the several parts of it. Decay of Piety.

They were a sort of attributes, with which it was a matter of religion to salute them on all occasions, and which it was an irreverence to omit. Pope.

2. State of being disregarded.

The concurrence of the house of peers in that fury, can be imputed to no one thing more than to the irreverence and scorn the judges were justly in, who had been always looked upon there as the oracles of the law. Clarendon.

IRREVERENT. adj. [irreverent, Fr. in and reverent.] Not paying due homage or reverence; not expressing or conceiving due veneration or respect.

As our fear excludeth not that boldness which becometh faints, so, if our familiarity with God do not favour of fear, it draweth too near that irreverent confidence wherewith true humility can never stand. Hester.

Knowledge men sought for, and covered it from the vulgar sort as jewels of ineffable price, fearing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious. Rassels.

Witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame
Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,
Swearing, and the irreverent using the name of God in common discourse, is another abuse of the tongue. Milt. Par. Lost.

If an irreverent expression or thought too wanton are crept into my verses, through my inadvertency, let their authors be answerable for them. Dryden.

IRREVERENTLY. adv. [from irreverent.] Without due respect or veneration.

'Tis but an ill essay of reverence and godly fear to use the gospel irreverently. Government of the Tongue.

IRREVERSIABLE. adj. [in and reversis.] Not to be recalled; not to be changed.

The sins of his chamber and his closet shall be produced before men and angels, and an eternal irreversible sentence be pronounced. Rogers's Sermons.

IRREVERSIBLY. adv. [from irreversible.] Without change.

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church, at which so many myriads of foliadians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRREVOCABLE. adj. [irrevocabilis, Latin; irrevocably, French.] Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reversed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,
And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Shakespeare.
Firm and irrevocable is my doom,
Which I have past upon her. Shakespeare. As you like it.

That which is past is gone and irrevocable, therefore they do but trifle that labour in past matters. Bacon's Essays.

The second, both for piety renown'd,
And pious deeds, a promise shall receive Irrevocable, that his regal throne
For ever shall endure. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By her irrevocable fate,
War shall the country waste and change the state. Dryden.

The other victor flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood;
For ever lost, th' irrevocable light
Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night. Dryden.

Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,
And each irrevocable word is fate. Pope.

IRREVOCABLY. adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recall.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the fire would be irrevocably extinguished. Boyle.

TO IRRIGATE. v. a. [irrigo, Latin.] To wet; to moisten; to water.

The heart, which is one of the principal parts of the body, doth continually irrigate, nourish, keep hot, and supple all the members. Ray on the Creation.

A bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. A. Phillips.

IRRIGATION. n.f. [from irrigate.] The act of watering or moistening.

Help of ground is by watering and irrigation. Bacon.

IRRIGUOUS. adj. [from irrigate.]

1. Watery; watered.

The flow'ry lap
Of some irriguous valley spreads her store. Milton.

2. Dewy; moist. Phillips seems to have mistaken the Latin phrase irriguous sapor.

Rash Elpenor
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
To exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep.
Imprudent! him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

IRRISION. n.f. [irrisio, Lat. irrisio, French.] The act of laughing at another.

This person, by his indifferet and unnatural irrisio, and exposing of his father, incurs his indignation and curse. Woodward's Natural History.

TO IRRITATE. v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, French.]

1. To provoke; to tease; to exasperate.

The earl, speaking to the freeholders in imperious language, did not irritate the people. Bacon's Henry VII.

His power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could slacken them according to his own humour and indiscretion, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his choleric disposition. Clarendon.

ISI

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritate them. Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enforce.

Air, if very cold, irritate the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.

When they are collected, the heat becometh more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Rous'd
By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson's Summer.

IRRITATION. n.f. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritare.]

1. Provocation; exasperation.

2. Stimulation; vellication.

Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious. Arbutnot.

IRRUPTION. n.f. [irruption, Fr. irruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance.

I refrain, too suddenly,
To utter what will come at last too soon;
Left evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep. Milton.

'There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea. Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholick blood into the heart puts a stop to its pulsation. Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled. Addison on Italy.

Is. [Sax. See To Be.]

1. The third person singular of to be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words. Jo. viii. 47.
Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good. Jer. x. 5.

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in furnace, and nothing is.
But what is not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is sometimes expressed by is.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting. Shakespeare.
Isabella's Colour. n.f. A kind of colour.

ISCHIADICK. adj. [ischion, ischiadikos; ischiadique, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet given to the veins of the foot that terminate in the crural.

ISCHURV. n.f. [ischuria, ischos and ur, urine; ischurie, Fr. ischuria, Latin.] A stopping of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURITICK. n.f. [ischuriticus, Fr. from ischuria.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISH. [yc, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Suedish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as foolish, foolishly; man, mannish; regue, reguish.

ISICLE. n.f. [More properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise; isc, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?
—The noon of Rome; chaste as the isicle
That's cuddled by the frost from purest snow
Hanging on Dian's temple. Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for isicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLASS. n.f. [from ice, or ise, and glass; that is, matter congealed into glass; ichthyocolla, Latin.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue, but cleaner and sweeter. We usually receive it in twisted pieces, of a roundish figure like a staple, which the druggists divide into thin threads like skins, that easily dissolve. The fish from which isinglass is prepared is one of the cartilaginous kind, and a species of sturgeon: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and in its general figure greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and many other of the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. The greatest quantity of isinglass is made in Russia. It is an excellent agglutinant and strengthener, and often prescribed in gellies and broths. The wine-coopers find it efficacious for clearing wines. Hill's Mat. Med.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incrustating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass. Flower.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ISS

ISINGLASS Stone. n.f. This is a fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. It is found in broad masses, composed of a multitude of extremely thin plates or flakes. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. The ancients made their windows of it, instead of glass. It is also sometimes used for glass before pictures, and for horn in lanterns. Hill's Mat. Med.

ISLAND. n.f. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; ealand, Dike. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple. — And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier island in the wat'ry waste.
Island of bliss! amid' the subject seas. Thomson.

ISLANDER. n.f. [from island. Pronounce iland.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camd.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence. Shakespeare. Othello.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and unpolite: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison's Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boisterous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope's Odyssey.

ISLE. n.f. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

Is it not an easy matter
To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the intalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle? Shakespeare. R. III.

The dreadful sight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disform an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, French, from aia, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from alce, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long founding isles and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy sits. Pope.

ISOPERIMETRICAL. n.f. [isoper, metri, and isoperos] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISOCELES. n.f. [isocèle, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUE. n.f. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Pf. lxxviii. 20.
Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life. Prov. iv. 23.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprize. Fairfax.

If things were call upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin 'till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South's Sermons.

The wisest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South's Sermons.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires. Cent.

4. Termination;

ISS

4. Termination; conclusion.
He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.
What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest!
Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Dryden.
5. Sequel deduced from premises.
I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakespeare's Othello.
6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.
This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wise man.
7. Evacuation.
A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mat. ix. 20.
8. Progeny; offspring.
O nation miserable!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True paradise, under the Æthiopian line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.
This old peaceful prince, as heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryden's Æn.
The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to confit with this hypothesis. Locke.
9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife, sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæstio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be quæstio facti. Covel.
To issue. v. n. [from the noun; issue, Fr. uiscire, Italian.]
1. To come out; to pass out of any place.
Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek. xlvii. 1.
From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History of the World.
Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton.
Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,
Dulness o'er all posses'd her ancient right. Pope.
2. To make an eruption.
Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakespeare.
See that none hence issue forth a spy.
Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.
At length there issu'd from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issue through the fides assembling swarms. Dryden.
Fill for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope's Odyssey.
3. To proceed as an offspring.
Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings xx. 18.
4. To be produced by any fund.
These altars issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe's Parergon.
5. To run out in lines.
It would be tried in pipes, being made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bacon's Natural History.
To issue. v. a.
1. To send out; to send forth.
A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.
If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation. Clarendon.
Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

IT

- In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryden.
They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.
Issueless. adj. [from issue.] Without offspring; without descendants.
Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
I have done sin;
For which the heav'n's, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Isthmus. n. f. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.
There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnablely fortified. Sandy's Travels.
The north side of the Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood on Langues.
O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and overwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.
Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some bufs in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stillingfleet.
Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Cicero.
Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.
IT. pronoun. [It, Saxon.]
1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things.
Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramb. against Hobbs.
Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.
Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.
His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.
The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.
How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.
A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions!
The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabric began to melt. Addison's Freeholder.
If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley's Sermons.
2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.
How is it with our general?
—Even so
As with a man by his own alms impoison'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.
It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
4. It is sometimes expressed by 't'.
He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.
The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.
5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.
If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.
The Lacedæmonians, at the straits of Thermopyæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.
I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.
A mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Addison's Spectator.
Whether the charmer sinner it, or faint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.
6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.
Let us assess him,
Who's care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a p'rk's kinman. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Do

ITE

- Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and it grandam will Give it up him. Shakespeare's King John.
7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the ity of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.
Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word
Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
City,
'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.
ITCH. n. f. itcha, Saxon.]
1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopes have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.
Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrow of our youths,
That gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shakespeare's Timon.
The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can'st not be healed. Deut. xxvii. 27.
As if divinity had catch'd
The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd. Hudibras.
2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.
3. A constant teasing desire.
A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.
He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.
From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.
At half mankind when generous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves:
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.
To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.
A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration.
My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear. Dryden.
2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.
Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakespeare.
Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To fell and murther your offices for gold. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank.
All such have still an itching to deride,
And vain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.
ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.
ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.
ITEM. n. f.
1. A new article.
I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by item. Shakespeare.
If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanville.
2. A hint; an innuendo.
To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Latin.]
1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.
We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of Scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture he doth. Hooker.
If the one may monthly, the other may daily be iterated.
In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.
The kings, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry VII.
There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in con-

JUD

- currence, when the sound reflecting, returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon's Natural History.
2. To do over again.
Adhes thoroughly burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespasses fear'd, the more to sooth
Him with her lov'd society. Milton's Par. Lost, l. ix.
ITERANT. adj. [iterans, Latin.] Repeating.

We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.
5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.
Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition.
Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

JUD

6. Opinion; notion.
I see mens judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward
Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you. Shakespeare.
7. Sentence against a criminal.
When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was fix'd
With agony. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. Acts xxv. 15.
On Adam last this judgment he pronounc'd. Milton.
8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.
The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Rom. v. 16.
The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the Gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be for many articles of accusation. Tilghson.
9. Punishment inflicted by providence, with reference to some particular crime.
This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shakespeare, King Lear.
We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison's Spectator.
10. Distribution of justice.
The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat. Acts xviii. 12.
Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests. Digby on Bodies.
2. To practise artifice or imposture.
Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Is't possible the spells of France should juggle Men into such strange mockeries? Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
They ne'er forswore themselves, nor lied,
Disdain'd to flay for friends contents;
Nor juggl'd about settlements. Hudibras, p. iii.
- JUGGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A trick by legerdemain.
The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience. Tillotson.
- JUGGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]
1. One who practises flight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.
They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working forerers that change the mind,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like liberties of sin. Shakespeare.
I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Aristaeus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cræsus, and a notable juggler. Sandy's Travels.
Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The juggler which another's slight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know.
One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 18.
What magic makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main;
Or do these jugglers cheat us? Swift's Miscel.
2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.
O me, you juggler! oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him? Shakespeare.

2. Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain. Thomson.
- The fluid in animal bodies.
Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. Benj. Johnson's Discovery.
An animal whose juices are unbound can never be nourished; unbound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbutnot.
- JUICELESS. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.
Divine Providence has spread her table every-where; not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass. More's Antidote against Atheism.
When Boreas' spirit blusters fore,
Beware th' inclement heav'n's; now let thy hearth
Crackle with juiceless boughs. Philips.
- JUICINESS. n. f. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.
- JUICY. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice.
Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Each plant and juicy gourd will pluck.
The musk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring. Philips.
- To JUKE. v. n. [jucher, French.]
1. To perch upon any thing: as, birds,

JUM

- To JUMBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jembre, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.
Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.
A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.
- Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky mains make people wise;
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.
Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually ordered for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter. Bentley's Sermons.
- How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope's Dunciad.
That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.
- To JUMBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.
They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.
- JUMBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.
Had the world been coagulated from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.
What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.
- JUMENT. n. f. [jument, Fr. jumentum, Lat.] Beast of burthen.
Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola. Shakef. Twelfth Night.
In some sort it jumps with my humour. Shakef. Othello.
But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet. Shakef. Othello.
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the bar'rous nations. Shakef. Othello.
Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipsius. Hakevall.
Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras, p. i.
This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras, p. iii.
Good wits jump, and mine the nimble of the two. More.
Good now, how your devotions jump with mine. Dryd.
I am happier for finding our judgments jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.
- JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.
Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well doers. Hooker.
But since jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polish wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd. Shakef. Hamlet.
Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shakef. Othello.
- JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip.
The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible. Locke.
2. A lucky chance.
Do not exceed
The precept of this crowl: our fortune lies Upon this jump. Shakef. Antony and Cleopatra.

By this profession in that juncture of time, they bid farewell to all the pleasures of this life. Addison.
When any law does not conduce to the publick safety, but in some extraordinary junctures, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 16.
- JUNE. n. f. [Jun, Fr. Junius, Lat.] The sixth month from January.
June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Peacham.
- JUNIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.
The fools my juniors by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift.
According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distribution of wealth. Tatler, N^o. 100.
- JUNIPER. n. f. [juniperus, Lat.] A plant.
The leaves of the juniper are long, narrow, and prickly; the male flowers are, in some species, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree; but in other species they are produced on different trees from the fruit: the first is a soft pulpy berry, containing three seeds in each. Miller.
Some of our common juniper shrubs are males and some females, of the same species. The male shrubs produce, in April and May, a small kind of juli with apices on them, very large, and full of farina; the females produce none of these juli, but only the berries, which do not ripen till the second year, and then do not immediately fall off; so that it is no uncommon thing to see the berries of three different years at once on the same tree. The shrub is very common with us on heaths and barren hills, but the berries used medicinally in our shops are brought from Germany, where it is greatly more abundant. The berries are powerful attenuants, diureticks, and carminative. Hill.
A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wifem.
- JUNK. n. f. [probably an Indian word.]

- JUNTO. n. f. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.
Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality. South.
From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliver's Travels.
- IVORY. n. f. [ivoire, French; chur, Lat.]
Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour, and capable of a very good polish: it is the denser extertus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length, of the thickness of a man's thigh at the base, and almost entirely solid; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance, seeming to have a great number of glands in it. The finest ivory is brought from the East-Indies, where great quantity of it is not taken immediately from the head of the animal, but found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon and of Achem do not become yellow in the wearing as all other ivory does, and it therefore bears a greater price than of the Guinea coast. The preparations of ivory have the same restorative virtues with those of the hartshorn. Hill.
There is more difference between these flesh and bers, than between jet and ivory. Shakef. Merchant of Venice.
Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacham.
From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.
Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd ivory this, that of transparent horn:
True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd ivory pass deluding lies. Dryden's En. Je'tros.

Officer, jugler, or justice of peace,
Juror, or judge. Donne.
About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.
- JURY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. jura, Fr.]
Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheator make inquiry in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by jury, that is, where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half year courts of the justices errant, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either appear by writing upon them these words, illa vera, or dis-

JUS

- allow by writing ignotus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred, where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the case of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowell.
- The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shakef. Meas. or Measure.
How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakef. H. IV.
Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bae.
- JURMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.
The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jury-men may dine. Pope.
No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift's Miscel.
- JURMAST. n. f. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast left in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the mislen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a hard shift to sail. Harris.
- JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Latin.]

arius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. *Cowel.*7. JUSTICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestarum.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert:

of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. *Cowel.*8. JUSTICES of Assize. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assizes; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. *Cowel.*9. JUSTICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termedof the French erres, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the king's bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Termi-ner, because they were sent upon some one or few especial causes, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. *Cowel.*10. JUSTICES of Gaol Delivery. [justicarii ad Gaolos delivran- das.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners, that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowel.

11. JUSTICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justiciariivenerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clauseof adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. *Cowel.*12. JUSTICES of Peace. [justicarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

K.

K E C

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill; but is not much in use, except after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, clouke, checke, triec. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, clouke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shock, beck. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, kneec, knell.

Thy head and hair are sleek ;
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.
To KEN. v. a. [cennan, Saxon ; keunan, Dutch, to know.]
1. To see at a distance ; to descry.
At once as far as angels ken, he views
The dismal situation, waste and wild. Milton's Par. Lost.
The next day about evening we saw, within a kenning, before us thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land.
Bacon's New Atlantis.
If thou ken'st from far,
Among the Pleiads, a new-kindled star ;
'Tis she that shines in that propitious light.
We ken them from afar, the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms. Addison.
2. To know.
'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gate.
Now plain I ken whence love his rise begun :
Sure he was born some bloody butcher's son,
Bred up in shambles. Gay's Past.
KEN. n. f. [from the verb.] View ; reach of sight.
Lo ! within a ken, our army lies. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
When from the mountain top Pifanio shew'd thee,
Thou wast within a ken. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
It was a hill

KER

Of paradise the highest ; from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,
Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect, lay. Milton.
He loon
Saw within ken a glorious angel stand. Milton.
Rude, as their ships, was navigation then ;
No useful compass or meridian known :
Coasting they kept the land within their ken,
And knew the North but when the pole-star shone. Dryd.
When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance. Locke.
K'ENNEL. n. f. [chenil, French.]
1. A cot for dogs.
A dog sure, if he could speak, had wit enough to describe his kenel. Sidney.
From forth the kenel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death. Shakespeare.
The seditious remain within their station, which, by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude, might be more fitly termed a kenel than a camp. Hayward.
2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kenel of French curs. Shakespeare.
3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.
4. [Kennel, Dutch ; chenal, Fr. cahalis, Latin.] The watercourse of a stream.
Bad humours gather to a bile ; or, as divers kenels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased. Hayw.
He always came in so dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kenel at a boarding-school. Arbutnot.
To K'ENNEL. v. n. [from kenel.] To lie ; to dwell : used of beasts, and of man in contempt.
Yet, when they list, would creep,
If ought disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
And kenel there ; yet there still bark'd and howl'd Within, unseen. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
The dog kennel'd in a hollow tree, and the cock rooted upon the boughs. L'Estrange's Fables.
KEPT. pret. and part. pass. of keep.
K'ERCH'IEF. n. f. [kercheif, Chaucer ; corone, to cover, and chief, the head ; and hence a handkerchief to wipe the face or hands.]
1. A head dress.
I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond ; thou hast the right arch'd bent of the brow, that becomes the tire vaultant.
—A plain kerchief, Sir John ; my brows become nothing else. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
The proudest kerchief of the court shall rest
Well satisfy'd of what they love the best. Dryden.
2. Any cloth used in dress.
O ! what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,
To wear a kerchief. Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar.
Every man had a large kerchief folded about the neck.
Hayward.
K'ERCH'IED. adj. [from kerchief.] Dressed ; hooded.
K'ERCH'IFT. adj. The evening comes Kerchief in a comely cloud,
While racking winds are piping loud. Milton.
K'ERF. n. f. [cofpan, Saxon, to cut.]
The fawn-away slit between two pieces of stuff is called a kerf. Maxon's Mech. Exercise.
K'ERMES. n. f.
Kermes is a roundish body, of the bigness of a pea, and of a brownish red colour, covered when most perfect with a purplish grey dust. It contains a multitude of little distinct granules, soft, and when crushed yield a scarlet juice. It is generally understood to be a vegetable excrecence ; but we now know it to be the extended body of an animal parent, filled with a numerous offspring, which are the little red granules. Hill.
KERN. n. f. [an Irish word.] Irish foot soldier ; an Irish boot.
Out of the fry of these rake-hell horleboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kearn supplied. Spenser.
No sooner justice had with valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping *kernel*s to trust their heels,
But the Norwegian lord, surveying advantage,
Began a fresh assault. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If in good plight these Northern *kernel*s arrive,
Then does fortune promise fair. Philips's Briten.
KERN. n. f. A hand-mill consisting of two pieces of stone, by which corn is ground. It is still used in some parts of Scotland.
To KERN. v. n. [probably from kernel, or, by change of a vowel, corrupted from corn.]
1. To harden as ripened corn.
When the price of corn falleth, men break no more ground than will supply their own turn, wherethrough it falleth out that an ill kernel or faved harvest soon emptieth their old store. Carew's Survey of Cornwall. 2. To

KEY

2. To take the form of grains ; to granulate.
The principal knack is in making the juice, when sufficiently boiled, to kernel or granulate. Grew.
KERNEL. n. f. [cýrnel, a gland, Saxon ; karne, Dutch ;
kerneu, French.]
The edible substance contained in a shell.
As brown in hue
As hazle nuts, and sweeter than the *kernel*s. Shakespeare.
There can be no kernel in this light nut ; the foul of this man is his clothes. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.
The kernel of the nut serves them for bread and meat, and the shells for cups. More.
2. Any thing included in a husk or integument.
The kernel of a grape, the fig's small grain,
Can cloath a mountain, and o'erhade a plain. Denham.
Oats are ripe when the straw turns yellow and the kernel hard. Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. The seeds of pulpy fruits.
I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the *kernel*s of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare, Tempest.
The apple inclosed in wax was as fresh as at the first putting in, and the *kernel*s continued white. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
4. The central part of any thing upon which the ambient strata are concentered.
A solid body in the bladder makes the kernel of a stone. Arb.
5. Knobby concretions in childrens flesh.

well, and yield a good increase. Mortimer's Husbandry.
K'ERRELLY. adj. [from kernel.] Full of *kernel*s ; having the quality or resemblance of *kernel*s.
K'ERNEWORT. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
K'ERSEY. n. f. [karfjes, Dutch ; carifce, French.] Coarse stuff.
Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
I do forswear them ; and I here protest,
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In rullet yeas, and honest kersey noes. Shakespeare.
His lackey with a linnen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.
The same wool one man felts it into a hat, another weaves
it into cloth, and another into kersey or serge. Hale.
Thy kersey doublet spreading wide,
Drew Cicely's eye aside. Gay.
KEST. The preter tense of cast. It is still used in Scotland.
Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kest. Fairfax.
K'ESTREL. n. f. A little kind of bastard hawk. Hammer.
In his kestrel kind,
A pleasing vein of glory, vain did find,
To which his flowing tongue, and troublous spirit,
Gave him great aid. Fairy Queen.
Kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks. Bacon.
K'ENCH. n. f. [from caischio, Italian, a barrel.] A heavy ship.
I wonder
That such a ketch can with his very bulk
Take up the rays of th' beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth. Shak. Henry VIII.
KETTLE. n. f. [ceet, Saxon ; ketel, Dutch.] A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower towards the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.
The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on ;
Like burnish'd gold the little scethers shone. Dryden.
K'ETTLEDUM. n. f. [kettle and drum.] A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brags.
As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
K'FY. n. f. [coegs, Saxon.]
1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.
If a man were porter of hellgate, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shak. King Lear.
Poor key cold figure of a holy king !
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The glorious standard left to heav'n they spread,
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Fairfax.
Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opens the palace of eternity. Milton.
Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets ; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South's Sermons.
He came, and knocking thrice, without delay
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dryden.
I keep her in one room, I lock it ;
The key, look here, is in this pocket. Prior.

KIC

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.
Hide the key of the jack. Swift.
3. An explanation of any thing difficult.
An emblem without a key to't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.
These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burket's Theory of the Earth.
Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.
4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.
Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch the keys. Pam.
5. [In music.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted ; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.
Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries ;
But I will wed thee in another key.
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakespeare.
But speak you with a sad brow ? Or do you play the flouting Jack ? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song ? Shak. Much Ado about Nothing.
Not know my voice ! Oh, time's extremity !
Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue
In fev'n short years, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares ? Shakespeare.
6. [Kaye, Dutch ; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.
A key of fire ran along the shore, Dryden.
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze.
K'YAGE. n. f. [from key.] Money paid for lying at the key. Ainsworth.
K'YHOLE. n. f. [key and hole.] The perforation in the door or lock through which the key is put.
Make doors fast upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the cafeament ; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole. Shakespeare.
I looked in at the keyhole, and saw a well-made man. Tatler.
I keep her in one room ; I lock it ;
The key, look here, is in this pocket ;
The keyhole is that left ? Most certain. Prior.
K'YSTONE. n. f. [key and stone.] The middle stone of an arch.
If you will add a keystone and chaptrals to the arch, let the breadth of the upper part of the keystone be the height of the arch. Maxon's Mech. Exerc.
KIBE. n. f. [from kerb, a cut, German, Skinner ; from kibow, Welsh, Mingheo.] An ulcerated chilblain ; a chap in the heel caused by the cold.
If 'twere a kibe, 'twould put me to my slipper. Shakespeare.
The toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of our courtier, that it galls his kibe. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
One boast of the cure, calling them a few kibes. Wife man.
K'IBED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes : as kibed heels.
To KICK. v. a. [kauchen, German ; cako, Latin.] To strike with the foot.
He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.
It anger'd Turenne once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.
Another, whose son had employments at court, that valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.
To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.
Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded ? 1 Sa. ii. 29.
Jethurun waxed fat and kicked. Deutr. xxxii. 15.
The doctrines of the holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillot.
KICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.
What, are you dumb ? Quick, with your answer, quick,
Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dryd. Juvenal.
K'ICKER. n. f. [from kick.] One who strikes with his foot.
K'ICKSHAW. n. f. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, something ; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise ; for he writes it kick-shaw, and seems to think it used in contempt of dancing.]
1. Something uncommon ; fantastical ; something ridiculous.
Shall we need the monstres of Paris to take our hopeful youth into their slight and prodigal custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kick-shaws ? Milton.
2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.
Some pigeons, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shakespeare, H. IV.
In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour ;
Cressly was lost by kickshaws and soup-meagre. Fenton.
K'ICKSY-WICKSEY. n. f. [from kick and winse.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hammer.

KIL

- He wears his honour in a box, unseen,
That hugs his kicky-wick here at home,
Spending his manly marrow in her arms.
Shakespeare.
- KID. n. f. [kid, Danish.]
1. The young of a goat.
Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring. Fa. Queen.
There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which fight Sir Richard Graham tells, he would snap one of the kids, and carry him close to their lodging. Wotton.
Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw Dandled the kid. Milton.
So kids and whelps their fires and dams express;
And so the great I measure'd by the less. Dryden's Virgil.
2. [From cidulen, Welsh, a faggot.] A bundle of heath or furze.
To KID. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth kids.
KIDDER. n. f. An ingrosser of corn to enhance its price. Ainsl.
To KIDNAP. v. a. [from kind, Dutch, a child, and nap.] To steal children; to steal human beings.
KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings.
The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.
These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spettator.
KIDNEY. n. f. [Etymology unknown.]
1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the ferosity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.
A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his melancholy and kidneys. Wise's Surgery.
2. Race; kind: in ludicrous language.
Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.
KIDNEYBEAN. n. f. [so named from its shape.]
It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the point, which becomes a long pod, inclosing several seeds, which are shaped almost like a kidney: it has pinnated leaves, consisting of an unequal number of lobes. Miller.
Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesome food. Mortimer's Husbandry.
KIDNEYVETCH. n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.
KIDNEYWORT. n. f. [kindekin, a baby, Dutch.] A small barrel.
Make in the kidneykin a great bung-hole of purpose. Bacon.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ;
But sure thou'rt but a kidneykin of wit. Dryden.
To KILL. v. a. [Anciently To quell; cpellan, Saxon; kel, Dutch.]
1. To deprive of life; to put to death as an agent.
Dar'lt thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?
—Please you, I'd rather kill two enemies. Shakespeare's R. III.
Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Ex. xvi. 3.
There was killing of young and old, making away of men, women, and children. 2 Mac. v. 13.
2. To destroy animals for food.
We're mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
To fright the animals, and to kill them up
In their assign'd and native dwelling place. Shakespeare's Deut. xii.
Thou shalt kill off thy herd, and of thy flock. Deut. xii.
Shall I take my bread, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers? 1 Sa. xxv. 11.
3. To deprive of life as a cause or instrument.
The medicines which go to the magical ointments, if they were used inwards, would kill those that use them; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.
4. To deprive of vegetative or other motion, or active qualities.
Try with oil, or barm of drink, so they be such things as kill not the bough. Bacon's Natural History.
Catharticks of mercurials mix with all animal acids, as appears by killing it with spittle. Floyer on the Humours.
KILLER. n. f. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.
What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Am-phialus, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son! Sidney.
Wilt thou for the old lion hunt, or fill
His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,
When couch'd in dreadful deus? Savay's.
So rude a time,
When love was held so capital a crime,

KIN

- That a crown'd head could no compassion find,
But dy'd, because the killer had been kind. Waller.
KILLER. n. f. [This seems a corruption of coal and law, a flame, as foot is thereby produced.]
An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doublets had its name from killow, by which name, in the North, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Wadward.
KILN. n. f. [cyl, Saxon.] A stove; a fabrick formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.
What shall I do? I'll creep up into the chimney. —
There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kiln hole. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
After the putting forth in sprouts, and the drying upon the kiln, there will be gained a bushel in eight of malt. Bacon.
Physicians chuse lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slack'd. Mason's Arch. Exer.
To KILNDRY. v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kiln.
The best way is to kilndry them. Mortimer's Husbandry.
KILT for kill'd. Spenser.
KILMBOW. adj. [to fehmbo, Italian.] Crooked; bent; arched.
The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carv'd,
And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden's Virgil.
He observed them edging towards one another to whisper;
so that John was forced to sit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
KIN. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]
1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.
You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their errors. Bacon's Advice to Fathers.
Th' unhappy Palamon,
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,
Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.
2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.
Tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound. Shakespeare.
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overrun by fury of the tide. Dryden.
3. A relation; one related.
Then is the soul from God; so pagans say,
Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind,
Naming her kin to God, and God's bright rays,
A citizen of heav'n, to earth confin'd. Dante.
4. The same general class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.
The burst,
And the ear-deaf'ning voice of the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense,
That I was nothing. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other calcareous salts. Boyle.
5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, man-nikin, minikin.
KIND. adj. [from cynne, relation, Saxon.]
1. Benevolent; filled with general good-will.
By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Some of the ancients, like kind hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South's Sermons.
2. Favourable; beneficent.
He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Lu. vi. 35.
KIND. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]
1. Race; general class. Kind in Teutonic English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.
Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hobbes.
As when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wings,
Came humm'd over Eden, to receive Their names of Thee. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. vi.
That both are animalia,
I grant; but not rationalia;
For though they do agree in kinds,
Specific difference we find. Hudibras, p. i.
God and nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but of kinds and companies. South's Sermons.
He with his wife were only left behind
Of peris'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.
I instance some acts of virtue common to Heathens and Christians; but I suppose them to be performed by Christians, after a more sublime manner than ever they were among the Heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Atturb.
He,

KIN

- He, with a hundred arts refus'd,
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind. Pope.
2. Particular nature.
No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found, upon enquiry, to have so many. Baker.
3. Natural state.
He did, by edict, give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them. Bacon's Henry VII.
The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decumse, or tithes. Arbutnot on Coins.
4. Nature; natural determination.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.
Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind to admire your fellow-creature. Dryden.
5. Manner; way.
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind than take five in the hundred. Bacon's Essays.
6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.
Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, what was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answer'd, because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not. Bacon.
To KINDLE. v. a.
1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.
He will take thereof, and warn himself; yea, he kindleth it and baketh bread. Jf. xiv. 15.
I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some meus dif-tempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. K. Charles.
If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. South's Sermons.
2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat;
to fire the mind.
I've been to you a true and humble wife;
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Job xix. 11.
Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
'Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Dante's Civ. War.
Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd
To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind. Dryden.
1. To catch fire.
When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Jf. xliii. 2.
2. [From cennan, to bring forth, Saxon.]
Are you native of this place?
—As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled. Shakespeare's King Lear.
KINDLER. n. f. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.
Now is the time that takes their revels keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep. Gay.
KINDLY. adv. [from kind.]
1. Benevolently; favourably; with good will.
Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Shakespeare's
I sometime lay here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly. Shakespeare's Coriol.
He kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Ra. xii. 10.
His grief some pity, others blame;
The fatal cause all kindly seek.
Who, with less deifying ends,
Kindlier entertain their friends;
With good words, and countenance sprightly,
Strive to treat them all politely? Swift.
KINDLY. adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]
1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.
This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby. Hammond.
Thine soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
Of various influence, foment and warm,
Temper or nourish. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. iv.
2. The foregoing sense seems to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.
3. Bland; mild; softening.
Through all the living regions do't thou move,
And scatter it, where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love. Dryden.

KIN

- Ye heav'n's, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r! Pope.
KINDNESS. n. f. [from kind.] Benevolence; beneficence;
good will; favour; love.
If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men. Ecclesi. xxxvi. 23.
Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people. Collier of Friendship.
Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.
Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers's Sermons.
KINDRED. n. f. [from kin; cynne, Saxon.]
1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; affinity.
Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dryden.
2. Relation; sort.
His horse hipp'd with an old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
3. Relatives.
I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.
KINDRED. adj. Congenial; related; cognate.
From Tuscan Corintum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god. Dryden.
KINE. n. f. plur. from cow.
To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her cyne. Ben. Johnson.
A field I went, amid' the morning dew,
To milk my kine. Gay.
KING. n. f. [A contraction of the Teutonic word king, or cynig, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Vestegau.]
1. Monarch; supreme governour.
The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder. Shakespeare's R. III.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
True hope is swift, and flies with swallows wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakespeare.
The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stateness,
Bounty, perfection, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown,
'Till common interest plac'd the sway in one;
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a fire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope.
2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine: as prince also is.
Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon.
3. A card with the picture of a king.
The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen. Pope.
4. KING AT ARMS. or of heralds, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarenceux.

William Dugdale, king at arms. Warton.
To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To supply with a king.
England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so faultlessly borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare's Henry V.
2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.
Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me with myself a beggar,
And so I am: then cruffling penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again. Shakespeare's Richard II.
KINGAPPLE. n. f. A kind of apple.
The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting. Mortimer.
KINGCRAFT. n. f. [king and craft.] The act of governing.

Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.
KINGDOM. n. f. [from king.]
1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.
You're welcome,
Most learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom. Shakep.
Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Num. xxxii.
2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.
The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.
3. A region; a tract.
The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakep. Merch. of Ven.
KINGFISHER. n. f. A species of bird.
When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bellows, kingfishers play on shore. May's Virgil.

There we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shakep.
Yet this place
Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come To reverence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.
In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.
The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.
2. Belonging to a king.
Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-cake to a common larum-bell? Shakep. H. IV.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command. Shakespeare.
3. Noble; august.
He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprises. Sidney.
I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts. Shakep.
KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty; with superior dignity.
Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Inclin'd not. Milt. Parad. Lost.
His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Dunciad.
KINGSEVIL. n. f. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of the king.
Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wise's Surgery.
KINGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty; monarchy.
They designed and proposed to me the new modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. K. Charles.
We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.
KINGSPEAR. n. f. A plant.
The stalk is round, smooth, strong, and branchy; the leaves like those of a leek, but stronger and narrower: the flowers are divided commonly as far as the base, naked, stel-lated, and embracing the ovary like a calyx: the apex of the ovary puts forth six stamens, and a long tube from the centre, which becomes a roundish fruit, carnos, triangular, divided into three partitions inclosing triangular seeds. Miller.
KINGSTONE. n. f. A fish. Ainsworth.
KINGSFOLK. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.
Those lords, since their first grants of those lands, have me. Job xix. 14.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

KIT

- The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinfman, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.
Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinfman to the crown the heralds deem'd. Dryden.
Let me stand excluded from my right,
Robb'd of my kinfman's arms, who first appear'd in fight.
Dryden's Heli.
There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinfman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.
KINSWOMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.
A young noble lady, near kinfwoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.
The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinfwoman. Demetrius's Letters.
KIRK. n. f. [cyrce, Saxon; kuraxk.] An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.
Home they hasten the posts to dight,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds, and sweet eglantine. Spenser.
Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots. Cleaveland.
What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.
KIRTLE. n. f. [cyrpel, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.
All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.
What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy poeies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.
To KISS. v. a. [cufau, Welsh; xiu.]
1. To touch with the lips.
But who those ruddy lips can kiss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shak. R. III.
2. To treat with fondness.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shak. H. VIII.
3. To touch gently.
The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakep. Merch. of Venice.
KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.
What fense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakep. Othello.
Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.
KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.
KISSINGCRUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.
These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer. King's Cookery.
KIT. n. f. [kitte, Dutch.]
1. A large bottle.

cuisine, French; cucina, Italian; Kyben, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.
These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.
Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kit-ben or a parlour for his own use? Hobbes.
He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kit-ben; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.
We see no new built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.
KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.
Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens. Bacon.
A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Speller.
KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kit-ben and maid.] A cookmaid.
KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan. As

KNA

- As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barreling the droppings and the muck
Of waiving candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.
Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel preaching ministry. Hudibras.
KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery. Shakespeare.
Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Swift.

KITCHENWORK. n. f. [kitchen and work.] Cookery; work done in the kitchen.
KITE. n. f. [cyrce, Saxon.]
1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.
Ravenous crows and kites Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Fly o'er our heads. Shakespeare's R. III.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakespeare's R. III.
The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, she weth winds; but kites, flying aloft, flew fair and dry weather. Bacon.
A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.
2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.
Detested kite! thou liest. Shakep. King Lear.
3. A fictitious bird made of paper.
A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will maully burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Grov. of the Tongue.
KITESFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.
KITTEN. n. f. [katte, Dutch.] A young cat.
That a mare will fouser down than an horse is not experienced, nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown's Vulg. Err.
It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wise's Surgery.
Helen was just flit into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.
To KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.
So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kittens, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakespeare.
The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.
To KLICK. v. n. [from clack.]
1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer or steal away suddenly with a snatch.
To KNAAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite.
Perhaps properly to bite something brittle: that makes a noise when it is broken; to as that knab and kna may be the same.
I had much rather lie knabbing crabs, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.
An ass was withling, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.
KNACK. n. f. [one, Welsh, fly knavery; knapping, skill, Sax.]
1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.
When I was young, I was wout
To load my me with knacks: I would have ranfack'd
The pedlar's filken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou do'st but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakespeare.
This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakespeare.
But is't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas, what are they but poems in prose! Denham.
He expounded both his pockets;
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.
2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.
I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. Ben. Jonson's Gypsies.
The knack of salt and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the deperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.
There is a certain knack in the art of conversation that gives a good grace to many things, by the manner and address of handling them. L'Estrange.
Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.
My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes

KNA

- another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Athenbury.
The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.
3. A nice trick.
For how should equal colours do the knack? Pope.
Cameleons who can paint in white and black?
To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.
KNA'CKER. n. f. [from knack.]
1. A maker of small work.
One part for plow-wright, cartwright, knacker, and smith.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. A ropemaker. [Reslie, Latin] Ainsworth.
KNAG. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retain'd in Scotland.]
A hard knot in wood.
KNA'GGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; fet with hard rough knots.
KNAP. n. f. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece;
cnep, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.
You shall see many fine feats set upon a knop of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathereth as in troughs. Bacon.
To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]
1. To bite; to break short.
He knappeth the spear in sunder. Common Prayer.
He will knapp the spears a-pieces with his teeth. Moss.
2. [Knaap, Erse] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knop a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon's Natural Hist.
To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.
I reduced shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knop in before they knew they were out. Wise's Surgery.
To KNA'PPLE. v. n. [from knap.] To break off with a sharp quick noise. Ainsworth.
KNA'PSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.
The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in Summer, and barns in Winter to be found: I with my kna sack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel 'till we come to the ridge of the world.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
KNA'PWEED. n. f. [jaccia, Latin.]
'This is one of the headed plants destitute of spines: the cup is squamose; the borders of the leaves are equal, being neither serrated nor indented: the florets round the border of the head are barren; but those placed in the center are succeeded each by one seed, having a down adhering to it. I here are fifty species of this plant, thirteen of which grow wild in England, and the rest are exotics. Miller.
KNARE. n. f. [knor, German.] A hard knot.
A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly stubs instead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knarves deform'd and old,
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.
KNAVE. n. f. [cnapa, Saxon]
1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.
For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting sight,
Yet hath fir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praise have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.
He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves;
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.
3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.
Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South's Sermons.
When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.
An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice.
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Dryden.
4. A card with a soldier painted on it. Pope.
For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
If we are brought in play upon't,
Or but by casting knaves get in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win? Hudibras.
KNA'VERY. n. f. [from knave.]
1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villainy.
Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakespeare.
If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Here's

KNE

Here's the folly of the ass in trusting the fox, and here's the knavery of the fox in betraying the ass. L'Estrange.
 The cunning courtier should be slighted too,
 Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
 'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
 Like Alop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.
 2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps for trifling things of more cost than use.
 We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
 With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. Shakespeare.
KN'AVISHLY. adj. [from knave.]
 1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.
 'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knaveish to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.
 2. Waggish; mischievous.
 Here she comes curs'd and sad;
 Cupid is a knaveish lad,
 Thus to make poor females mad. Shakespeare.
KN'AVISHLY. adv. [from knaveish.]
 1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.
 2. Waggishly; mischievously.
 To KN'EAD. v. a. [cnæban, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.
 Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakespeare.
 It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be;
 Wisdom makes him an ark where all agree. Donne.
 Thus kneaded up with milk the new made man
 His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
 'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood,
 And pride of empire, four'd his balmy blood. Dryden.
 One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
 And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.
 Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison's Spectator.
 No man ever reapt his corn,
 Or from the oven drew his bread,
 Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
 That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.
 The cake she kneaded was the fav'ry meat. Prior.
KN'EADINGTROUGH. n. f. [knæud and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.
 Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Ex. viii. 3.
KN'EE. n. f. [cnæp, Saxon; knæe, Dutch.]
 1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.
 Thy royal father
 Was a most faint king: the queen that bore thee,
 Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,
 Died every day. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 I have reserved to myself seven thousand, who have not bowed the knee to Baal. Ro. xi. 4.
 Scotch flink is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.
 I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton.
 Weary'd with length of ways, worn out with toil,
 To lay down, and leaning on her knees,
 Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
 And cast her languishing regards above,
 For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.
 Disdainful of Campania's gentle plains,
 When for them she must bend the servile knee. Thomson.
 2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Mason's Mech. Exerc.
 Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.
 To KN'EE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.
 Go you that bend'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down,
 And kneel the way into his mercy. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Return with her I
 Why, the hot-blooded France, that down'rels took Our youngest born: I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and acquire-like pension beg. Shakespeare.
KN'EE. adj. [from knæe.]

 Kneetribute yet unpaid, prostration vile. Milton.
KN'EL. n. f. [cnæl, Welsh, a funeral pile; cnyllan, to ring, Sax.]
 1. He found of a bell rung at a funeral.
 I would not wish them to a fairer death,
 And so his knæl is knoll'd. Shakespeare.
 Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
 Hark, now I hear them. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
 His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stir'd
 With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakespeare's H. VIII.
 All these motions, which we saw,
 Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
 Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
 Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.
 Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
 Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
 Unhappy 'till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.
 At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
 The am'rous youth around her bow'd:
 At night her fatal knell was rung;
 I saw, and kiss'd her in her shroud. Prior.
KN'EW. The preterite of know.
KN'IFE. n. f. plur. knives. [cnæf, Sax. kniff, Danish.] An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.
 Come, thick night,
 And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
 That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakespeare.
 Blest powers, forbid thy tender life
 Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.
 The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
 The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
 The streaming blood. Dryden's Æn.
 Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
 And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.
 Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.
KN'IGHT. n. f. [cnæp, Sax. knæcht, Germ. a servant, or pupil.]
 1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.
 That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
 Which Merlin made. Spenser.
 Sir knight, if knight thou be,
 Abandon this forestal place. Spenser.
 When every case in law is right,
 Noquire in debt, and no poor knight. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 Pardon, goddess of the night,
 Those that flew thy virgin knight;
 For the which, with fongs of woe,
 Round about her tomb they go. Shakespeare.
 This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,
 To give impiety to this rev'rent shield. Daniel's Civil War.
 Noquire with knight did better fit
 In parts, in manners, and in wit.
 2. Among us the order of gentlemen next to the nobility, except the baronets.
 The knight intends to make his appearance. Addison.
 3. A champion.
 He suddenly unties the poke,
 Which out of it sent such a smoke,
 As ready was them all to choke,
 So grievous was the pother;
 So that the knights each other lost,
 And stood as still as any post.
 Did I for this my country bring
 To help their knight against their king,
 Noquire with knight did better fit
 In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.
KN'IGHT ERRANT. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.
 Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.
 The

KNI

The ancient errant knights
 Won all their mistresses in fights;
 They cut whole giants into fritters,
 To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.
KN'IGHT ERRANT. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.
 That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needles encounters. Norris.
KN'IGHT OF THE POST. A hiring evidence.
 There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South's Sermon.
KN'IGHT OF THE SHIRE. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a year is qualified.
 To KN'IGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.
 Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted. Milton.
 The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.
 The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
 One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.
KN'IGHTLY. adj. [from knight.] Becoming a knight; becoming a knight.
 Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.
 How darest thou pride presume against my laws?
 As in a lifted field to fight your cause:
 Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
 As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.
KN'IGHTHOOD. n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.
 For that same knight's own sword this is of yore,
 Which Merlin made by his almighty art,
 For that his nourling, when he knighted swore,
 Therewith to do his foes eternal smart. Fairy Queen.
 Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
 And so defend thee heaven and thy valour. Shakespeare's R. II.
 Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
 A knighthood bought, to go a wooing in. Fen. Johnson.
 If you needs must write, write Caesar's praise,
 You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.
KN'IGHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.
 Arise, thou cursed miscreant,
 That hast with knightly guile, and treacherous train,
 Fair knighthood foully flamed. Fairy Queen.
 To KN'IT. v. n. preter. knit or knitted. [cnætan, Saxon.]

 And the premeditated flames of the last day
 Knit earth and heav'n together. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 Lay your highness
 Command upon me; to the which my duties
 Are with a most indissoluble tie
 For ever knit. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
 And the conjunction of our inward souls
 Married in league, coupled and link'd together
 With all religious strength of sacred vows. Shakespeare's King John.
 By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
 By that which knitteth souls, and prospers loves. Shakespeare.
 If ye be come peaceably, mine heart shall be knit unto you.
 That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love. Col. ii. 2.
 He doth fundamentally and mathematically demonstrate the firmest knittings of the upper timbers, which make the roof. Hutton's Architecture.
 Pride and impudence, in faction knit,
 Ufurp the chair of wit! Ben. Johnson's New Inn.
 Ye knit my heart to you by asking this question. Bacon.
 These two princes were agreeable to be joined in marriage, and thereby knit both realms into one. Hayward.

KNO

Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
 In a light fantastick round. Milton.
 God gave several abilities to several persons, that each might help to supply the publick needs, and, by joining to fill up all wants, they be knit together by justice, as the parts of the world are by nature. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
 Nature cannot knit the bones while the parts are under a discharge. Wijeman's Surgery.

Knottiness. n. f. [from knotty.] Fullness of knots; uneven-ness; intricacy; difficulty.
Virtue was represented by Hercules naked, with his lion's skin and knotted club: by his oaken club is signified reason ruling the appetite; the knottiness thereof, the difficulty they have that seek after virtue. Peachment on Drawing.

Knotty. adj. [from knott.]
1. Full of knots.
I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
The timber in some trees more clean, in some more knotty;
try it by speaking at one end, and laying the ear at the other;
for if it be knotty, the voice will not pass well. Bacon.
The knotty oaks their lifting branches bow. Reformation.
One with a brand yet burning from the flame,
Arm'd with a knotty club another came. Dryden's Æn.
Where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty burrs and thorns disgrace the ground:
Come, shepherds, come, and strew with leaves the plain;
Such funeral rites your Daphnis did ordain. Dryden.

2. Hard; rugged.
Valiant fools
Were made by nature for the wise to work with:
They are their tools; and 'tis the sport of statesmen,
When heroes knock their knotty heads together,
And fall by one another. Rowe's Ambitious Step-mother.

3. Intricate; perplexed; difficult; embarrassed.
King Henry, in the very entrance of his reign, when the

6. Difficulty; intricacy.
A man shall be perplexed with knotts and problems of business, and contrary affairs, where the determination is dubious, and both parts of the contrariety seem equally weighty; so that, which way soever the choice determines, a man is sure to venture a great concern. South's Sermons.

7. Any intrigue, or difficult perplexity of affairs.
When the discovery was made that the king was living, which was the knott of the play untied, the rest is shut up in the compass of some few lines, because nothing then hindered the happiness of Torimond and Leonora. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

8. A cluster; a collection.
The way of fortune is like the milky way in the sky, which is a meeting or knott of a number of small stars, not seen afunder, but giving light together. Bacon's Essay.
In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knotts of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To Knott. v. a. [from the noun.]

To KNOW. v. a. preter. I knew, I have known. [cnaian Saxon.]
1. To perceive with certainty, whether intuitive or discursive.
O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come! Shakespeare.
The memorial of virtue is immortal, because it is known with God and with men. Milton.
The gods all things know.
Not from experience, for the world was new,
He only from their cause their natures knew. Denham.
We doubt not, neither can we properly say we think we admire and love you above all other men: there is a certainty in the proposition, and we know it. Dryden.
When a man makes use of the name of any simple idea, which he perceives is not understood, or is in danger to be mistaken, he is obliged by the laws of ingenuity, and the end of speech, to declare his meaning, and make known what idea he makes it stand for. Locke.

2. To be informed of; to be taught.
Ye shall be healed, and it shall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you. 1 Sa. vi. 3.
Led on with a desire to know
What nearer might concern him. Milton.
One would have thought you had known better things than to expect a kindness from a common enemy. L'Estrange.

3. To distinguish.
Numeration is but the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole a new name, whereby to know it from those before and after, and distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Locke.

4. To recognise.
What a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on me, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee? Shakespeare.
They told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread. Lu. xxiv. 35.
At never view he thought he knew the dead,
And call'd the wretched man to mind. Platman.
Tell me how I may know him. Milton.

5. To be no stranger to.
What are you?
—A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling forrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare's King Lear.

6. To converse with another sex.
And Adam knew Eve his wife. Gen. iv. 4.

7. To see with approbation.
They have reigned, but not by me; they have set a feignory over themselves, but I knew nothing of it. Hofea.

To KNOW. v. n.
1. To have clear and certain perception; not to be doubtful.
I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and delivered me out of the hand of Herod. Acts xii. 11.

2. Not to be ignorant.
When they know within themselves they speak of that they do not well know, they would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak. Bacon's Essays, No. 27.
Not to know of things remote, but know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton.
In the other world there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly, when we knew to have done better; and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we understood the way to have been happy. Tillotson's Sermons.
They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, so as not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well initiated by the most able masters. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. To be informed.
The prince and Mr. Pains will put on two of our jerkins and aprons, and sir John must not know of it. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
There is but one mineral body, that we know of, heavier than common quicksilver. Boyle.

4. To KNOW for. To have knowledge of. A colloquial expression.
He said the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that own'd it, he might have more difficulties than he knew for. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

5. To KNOW of. In Shakespeare, is to take cognisance of; to examine.
Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For a to be in shady cloister mew'd.
Knowable. adj. [from know.] Cognoscible; possible to be discovered or understood. Shakespeare.
These are resolved into a confessed ignorance, and I shall not pursue them to their old asylum; and yet it may be, there is more knowable in these than in less acknowledged mysteries. Glauco. Scept.

KNU

Tis plain, that under the law of works is comprehended also the law of nature, knowable by reason, as well as the law given by Moses. Locke.
These two arguments are the voices of nature, the unanimous suffrages of all real beings and substances created, that are naturally knowable without revelation. Bentley.
KNOWER. n. f. [from know.] One who has skill or knowledge.
If we look on a vegetable as made of earth, we must have the true theory of the nature of that element, or we miserably fail of our scientific aspirations; and while we can only say 'tis cold and dry, we are pitiful knowers. Glauco.
I know the respect and reverence which in this address I ought to appear in before you, who are a general knower of mankind and poetry. Southern.

KNOWING. adj. [from know.]
1. Skillful; well instructed; remote from ignorance.
You have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath our noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
The knowing of these have of late reformed their hypothesis. Boyle.
What makes the clergy glorious is to be knowing in their profession, unsponsored in their lives, active and laborious in their charges. South.
The necessity of preparing for the offices of religion was a lesson which the mere light and dictates of common reason, without the help of revelation, taught all the knowing and intelligent part of the world. South's Sermons.
Gio Bellino, one of the first who was of any consideration at Venice, painted very dully, according to the manner of his time: he was very knowing both in architecture and perspective. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
All animals of the same kind, which form a society, are more knowing than others. Addison's Guardian.

2. Conscious; intelligent.
Could any but a knowing prudent Cause
Begin such motions and assign such laws?
If the Great Mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

KNOWING. n. f. [from know.] Knowledge.
Let him be so entertain'd as suits gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality. Shakespeare.

KNOWINGLY. adv. [from knowing.] With skill; with knowledge.
He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world.
More's Divine Dialogues.
They who before were rather fond of it than knowingly admired it, might defend their inclination by their reason. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
To the private duties of the closet he repaired, as often as he entered upon any business of consequence: I speak knowingly. Atterbury's Sermons.

KNOWLEDGE. n. f. [from know.]
1. Certain perception; indubitable apprehension.
Knowledge, which is the highest degree of the speculative faculties, consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions. Locke.

2. Learning; illumination of the mind.
Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakespeare.

3. Skill in any thing.
Do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

4. Acquaintance with any fact or person.
The dog straight fawned upon his master for old knowledge. Sidney.
That is not forgot,
Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge
I never in my life did look on him. Shakespeare's Rich. II.

5. Cognisance; notice.
Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger? Ruth ii. 10.
A state's anger should not take Knowledge, either of fools or women. Ben. Johnson's Catil.

6. Information; power of knowing.
I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly entreated her pardon, or knowledge, why she was cruel. Sidney.
To KNOWLEDGE. v. a. [not in use.] To acknowledge; to avow.
The prophet Hofea tells us that God faith of the Jews,
they have reigned, but not by me; which proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow: for though they be ordained by his secret providence, yet they are not known by his revealed will. Bacon's holy War.
To KNOWLEDGE. v. a. [kniper, Danish.] To beat. Skinmer.

K N U

KNU'CKLE. n. f. [knucle, Saxon; knockle, Dutch.]
 1. The joints of the fingers protuberant when the fingers close.
 Thus often at the Temple-flairs we've seen
 Two tritons, of a rough athletick mien,
 Sourly dispute some quarrel of the flood,
 With knuckles bruised, and face befmeared in blood. Garth.
 2. The knee joint of a calf.
 We find also that Scotch skinck, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and finews of beef, but long boiled: jelly also, which they used for a restorative, is chiefly made of knuckles of veal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 3. The articulation or joint of a plant.
 Divers herbs have joints or knuckles, as it were stops in their germination; as gillyflowers, pinks, fennel, and corn.
Bacon's Natural History.
 To KNU'CKLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To submit: I suppose from an odd custom of striking the under side of the table with the knuckles, in confession of an argumental defeat.
 KNU'CKLED. adj. [from knuckle.] Jointed.
 The reed or cane is a watry plant, and groweth not but in the water: it hath these properties, that it is hollow, and it is knuckled both stalk and root; that, being dry, it is more hard and fragile than other wood; that it putteth forth no boughs, though many stalks out of one root. Bacon's Nat. History.

K Y D

 KNUFF. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from knave, or the same with chuff.] A lout. An old word preserved in a rhyme of prediction.
 The country knuffs, Hob, Dick, and Hick,
 With clubs and clouted shoon,
 Shall fill up Duffendale
 With slaughtered bodies soon. Hayward.
 KNUR. } n. f. [knor, German.] A knot; a hard sub-KNURLE. } stance.
 The stony nodules found lodged in the strata, are called by the workmen knurs and knots. Woodward's Met. Foss.
 KOWED for knew. Spenser.
 To KYD. v. n. [corrupted probably from cuſs, Saxon.] To know.
 But ah, un'uft and worthless Colin Clout,
 That kydſt the hidden kinds of many a weed;
 Yet kydſt not one to cure thy ſore heart root,
 Whole rankling wound as yet doth riſtly bleed. Spenser.

MDCCLV.

L A liquid consonant, which preserves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated a *l*ap, *l*oaf; *l*plepoix, *l*ady.
At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, shall; still; full, except after a diphthong; as, fail; feel; veal; cool. In a word of more syllables it is written single; as, channel; canal; tendrill. It is sometimes put before e, and founded feebly after it; as bible; title.

LA. interj. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you speak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart. Shakes. Twelfth Night.

LABDANUM. n. f. A resin of the softer kind, of a strong and not unpleasant smell, and an aromatick, but not agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub, of the cistus kind, in Crete, and the neighbouring islands; and the Grecian women make balls of it with a small admixture of ambergrease, by way of a perfume. It was formerly used externally in medicine, but is now neglected. Hill.
To LABEY. v. a. [labescere, Latin.] To weaken; to impair.

LABEL. n. f. [labellum, Latin.]
1. A small slip or scrap of writing.

When wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.

On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal. Ayliff's Parergon.

3. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shakespeare.

LABENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; slipping. Diét.

LABIAL. adj. [labialis, Latin.] Uttered by the lips.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon's Natural History.

Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial. Holder's Elements of Speech.

LABIATED. adj. [labium, Latin.] Formed with lips.

LABIODENTAL. adj. [labium and dentalis.] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

The dental consonants are very easy; and first the labiodentals f, v, also the linguadentals th, dh. Hold. Elm. of Sp.

LABORANT. n. f. [laborans, Lat.] A chemist. Not in use. I can shew you a sort of fixt sulphur, made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LABORATORY. n. f. [laboratoire, French.] A chemist's work-room.

It would contribute to the history of colours, if chemists would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle on Colours.

The flames of love will perform those miracles they of the furnace boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Decay of Piety.

LABORIOUS. adj. [laboriosus, French; laboriosus, Latin.] 1. Diligent in work; arduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unimported in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. Souto's Sermon.

To his laborious youth consum'd in war,
And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace. Prior.
2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy.

A spacious cave within its farthest part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryd. Æn. 6.

Do't thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all? learn them from Cato. Add. Cato.

LABORIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.] With labour; with toil.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

I chuse laboriously to bear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope's Odyss.

LABORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from laborious.]
1. Toilomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gainlessness as well as the laboriousness of the work; those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiate miser. Decay of Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

LABOUR. n. f. [labour, French; labor, Latin.]
1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail; work.

If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shakes. M. W. of Windsor.

I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Thes. iii. 5.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

You were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband to much sweat. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

4. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of womens labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly doest enlarge,
In thee thy will to effect our wishful vow. Spens. Epith.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shooings, and of grinding pain;
My throws come thicker, and my cries encreas'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse suppress'd. Dryd.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Grant.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs 'till it be delivered. South's Sermon.

TO LABOUR. v. n. [labore, Latin.]
1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?
—You do climb up it now; look how we labour. Shakes.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd,
More than mine own. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

—None but the fool, who labours to out-jest
His heart-struck injuries. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Exod. v. 9.

2. To do work; to take pains.

Epaphras saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect. Col. iv. 12.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness shall not be rich. Ecclesi. xix. 1.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day. Nab. iv. 22.

Yet is there no end of all his labours; neither faith he, for whom do I labour. Ecclesi. iv. 8.

LAB

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. Locke.

3. To move with difficulty.
The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the labourer's toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

4. To be diseased with. [Morbo laborare, Latin.]
They abound with horfe,
Of which one want our camp doth only labour,
And I have found 'em coming. Bon. Johnson's Catiline.
I was called to another, who in childbed laboured of an ulcer in her left hip. Wifeman.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.
To this infernal lake the fury lies,
Here hides her hated head, and frees the lab'ring skies. Dryd.
Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the Throne,
As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon. Dryd. Mar.
This exercise will call down the favour of heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you. Wake's Preparation for Death.

6. To be in child-birth; to be in travail.
There lay a log unlighted on the earth,
When she was lab'ring in the throws of birth;
For th' unborn chief the fatal filters came,
And rais'd it up, and tofs'd it on the flame. Dryd. Ovid.
Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring God. Pope.
He is so touch'd with the memory of her benevolence and protection, that his soul labours for an expression enough to represent it. Notes on the Odyssey.

To LABOUR. v. a.
1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to form with labour; to prosecute with effect.
To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgment. 2. Mac.
The matter of the ceremonies had wrought, for the most part, only upon light-headed, weak men, whose satisfaction was not to be laboured for. Clarendon.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus shall feel,
And Sisyphus that labours up the hill,
The rowling rock in vain, and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryd.
Had you requir'd my helpful hand,
Th' artificer and art you might command,
To labour arms for Troy. Dryden's Æneis.
An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information. Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. To beat; to labour.
Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryden's Virg.

LABOURER. n. f. [labourer, French.]
One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.
If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.
The sun but seem'd the lab'rer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,
To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brimful vessels to the Belgian shore. Dryden.
Labourers and idle persons, children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbutn. on Aliments.
Not balmy sleep to lab'ers faint with pain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,
Are half so charming, as thy sight to me. Pope's Autumn.
Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears. Pope, Ep. iv. l. 167.
The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee. Swift's Miscel.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.
Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness. Shakesp.
The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

LABOURSOME. adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence.
Forget
Your labour'some and dainty trims, wherein You made great Jove angry. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
He hath, my lord, by labour'some petition,
Wrung from me my flow'rs. Shakesp. Hamlet.
LABRA. n. f. [Spanish.] A lip.
Word of denial in thy labras here;
Word of denial, troth and scam thou liest. Shakesp.

LABYRINTH. n. f. [labyrinthus, Latin.] A maze; a place formed with inextricable windings.
Suffolk, stay;

LAC

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotaurs, and ugly treasors lurk. Shakesp.
Words, which would tear
The tender labyrinth of a maid's soft ear. Donne.
My clamours tear
The ear's soft labyrinth, and cleft the air. Sandy's Paraph.
The earl of Essex had not proceeded with his accustomed wariness and skill; but run into labyrinths, from whence he could not disentangle himself. Clarendon, b. viii.
My soul is on her journey; do not now
Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself
I th' maze and winding labyrinths o' th' world. Denham.

LAC. n. f.
Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree. 1. The stick lac. 2. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom. Hill.

LACE. n. f. [lacet, French; laqueus, Latin.]
1. A string; a cord.
There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free therout; but all in vain;
For striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twain
In limy snares, the subtil loops among. Spenser.

2. A snare; a gin.
The king had snared been in love's strong lace. Fairfax.

3. A platted string, with which women fasten their clothes.
O! cut my lace, lest my heart crackling, it Break too. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Doll ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face. Swift.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.
Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces; and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.
He wears a stuff, whose thread is coarse and round,
But trimm'd with curious lace. Herbert.

6. Sugar.
If haply he the sect pursues,
That read and comment upon news;
He takes up their mysterious face,
He drinks his coffee without lace. Prior.

To LACE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with a string run through cilet holes.
I caused a fomentation to be made, and put on a laced sock, by which the weak parts were strengthened. Wifeman.
At this, for new replies he did stay,
But lac'd his crested helm, and strode away. Dryden.
These glittering spoils, now made the victor's gain,
He to his body suits; but suits in vain:
Mefapus' helm he finds among the rest, Dryd. Æneis.
And lace on, and wears the waving crest
Like Mrs. Primly's great belly; the may lace it down before, but it burlesques on her hips. Congr. Way of the World.
When Jenny's flays are newly lac'd, Fair Alma plays about her waist. Prior.

2. To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.
It is but a night-gown in respect of yours; cleath of gold and coats, and lac'd with silver. Shakesp. Much ado about Nst.

3. To embellish with variegations.
Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder East;
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tip-toe on the misty mountains tops. Shakesp.
Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustick, makes a front. Pope.

4. To beat; whether from the form which L'Estrange uses, or by corruption of lash.
Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye. L'Estrange.

LACED MUTTON. An old word for a whore.
Ay, Sir, I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her a lac'd mutton, and she gave me nothing for my labour. Shakesp.

LACEMAN. n. f. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.
I met with a nonjuror, engaged with a laceman, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Cæsar, or Nero. Addison's Spectator, N. 424.

LACERABLE. adj. [from lacerate.] Such as may be torn.
Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable compure. Harsog.

To LACERATE. v. a. [lacerare, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.
And my ions lacerate and rip up, viper like, the womb that brought them forth. Howell's England's Tears.

LACERATIVE. adj. [from lacerate.] Tearing; having the power to tear.
Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

LACHRYMAL. adj. [lachrymal, French.] Generating tears.
It is of an exquisite sense, that, upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

LACHRYMARY. adj. [lachryma, Latin.] Containing tears.
How many drelles are there for each particular deity? what a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, and lachrymary vessels. Addison's Travels through Italy.

LACHRYMATION. n. f. [from lachryma.] The act of weeping, or shedding tears.

LACHRYMATORY. n. f. [lachrymatoire, French.] A vessel in which tears are gathered to the honour of the dead.

LACINATED. adj. [from lacinia, Lat.] Adorned with fringes and borders.

To LACK. v. a. [lacken, to lessen, Dutch.] To want; to need; to be without.
Every good and holy desire, though it lack the form, hath notwithstanding in itself the substance, and with him the force of prayer, who regardeth the very meanings, groans, and sighs of the heart. Hooker, b. v. l. 348.
A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness; thou shalt not lack any thing in it. Deut. viii. 9.
One day we hope thou shalt bring back,
Dear Bolingbroke, the justice that we lack. Daniel.
Intreat they may; authority they lack. Daniel.

To LACK. v. n.
1. To be in want.
The lions do lack and suffer hunger. Common Prayer.

2. To be wanting.
Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous; wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? Gen. viii. 28.
There was nothing lacking to them: David recovered all. 1 Sam. xxx. 19.
That which was lacking on your part, they have supplied. 1 Cor. xvi. 17.

LACK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Want; need; failure.
In the scripture there neither wanteth any thing, the lack whereof might deprive us of life. Hooker, b. i. p. 41.
Many that are not mad
Have sure more lack of reason. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.
He was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Kneller's History of the Turks.
The trenchant blade, Toledo trusty,
For want of fighting was grown rusty,
And eat into itself, for lack
Of somebody to hew and hack. Hudibras, p. i. c. 1.

2. Lack, whether noun or verb, is now almost obsolete.

LACKBRAIN. n. f. [lack and brain.] One that wants wit.
What a lackbrain is this? Our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

LACKER. n. f. A kind of varnish, which, spread upon a white substance, exhibits a gold colour.

To LACKER. v. a. [from the noun.] To do over with lacker.
What shook the stage, and made the people stare?
Cato's long wing, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair. Pope.

LACKNEY. n. f. [laqueus, French.] An attending servant; a foot-boy.
They would fhave to make me
Wait else at door; a fellow counsellor,
Mong boys, and grooms, and lackeys! Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He's cautious to avoid the coach and fix,
And on the lackeys will no quarrel fix. Dryden's Juvenal.
Lackeys were never so faucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days. Addison's Spectator, N. 481.

To LACKNEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely.
I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.
This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, laquering the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
So dear to heav'n is faintly chaffity,
That when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lacky her,
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt. Milton.

To LACKNEY. v. n. To act as a foot-boy; to pay servile attendance.
Oft have I servants seen on horfes ride,
The free and noble lackney by their side. Sandy's Par.
Our Italian translator of the Æneis is a foot poet; he lady; by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryd. Ded. Æn.

LAD. n. f. [lack and linen.] Wanting lints.

LACTATION. n. f. [lactio, Latin.] The act or time of giving suck.

LACTEAL. adj. [from lac, Latin.] Conveying chyle.
As the food passes, the chyle, which is the nutritive part, is separated from the excrementitious by the lacteal veins; and from thence conveyed into the blood. Locke.

LACTEAL. n. f. The vessel that conveys chyle.
The mouths of the lacteals may permit aliment, acrimonious or not, sufficiently attenuated, to enter in people of lax constitutions, whereas their sphincters will shut against them in such as have strong fibres. Arbutn. on Aliments.

LACTEOUS. adj. [lacteus, Latin.]
1. Milky.
Though we leave out the lacteous circle, yet are there more by four than Philo mentions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Lacteal; conveying chyle.
The lungs are suitable for respiration, and the lacteal vessels for the reception of the chyle. Bentley's Sermon.

LACTESCENCE. n. f. [lactesco, Latin.] Tendency to milk.
This lactescence does commonly ensue, when wine, being impregnated with gums, or other vegetable concretions, that abound with sulphureous corpuscles, fair water is suddenly poured upon the solution. Boyle on Colours.

LACTESCENT. adj. [lactescens, Latin.] Producing Milk.
Amongst the pot-herbs are some lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, which contain a wholesome juice. Arbutn.

LACTIFEROUS. adj. [lac and fero.] What conveys or brings milk.
He makes the breasts to be nothing but glandules, made up of an infinite number of little knots, each whereof hath its excretory vessel, or lactiferous duct. Ray on the Creation.

LAD. n. f. [leede, Saxon, which commonly signifies people, but sometimes, says Mr. Lye, a boy.]
1. A boy; a stripling, in familiar language.
We were
Two lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
The poor lad who wants knowledge, must set his invention on the rack, to say something where he knows nothing. Locke.
Too far from the ancient forms of teaching several good grammarians have departed, to the great detriment of such lads as have been removed to other schools. Watts.

2. A boy, in pastoral language.
For grief whereof the lad would after joy,
But pin'd away in anguish, and self-will'd annoy. Fa. Qu.
The shepherd lad,
Whose offspring on the throne of Judah sat
So many ages. Milton's Par. Reg. b. ii. l. 439.

LADDER. n. f. [ladder, Saxon.]
1. A frame made with steps placed between two upright pieces.
Whose compost is rotten, and cartied in time,
And spread as it should be, thrift's ladder may clime. Thyff.
Now streets grow throng'd, and busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play,
And some more bold mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.
I saw a stage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants with two or three ladders to mount it. Gulliver's Travels.

LAD

- Easy in word; thy stile, in sense sublime;
'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream,
Its foot on earth, its height above the skies. Prior.
2. Any thing by which one climbs.
Then took she help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a haughty ambition; and such a one, who wanting true sufficiency to raise him, would make a ladder of any mischief. Sidney, b. ii.

I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords. Shakef. Two Gent. of Verona.
Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne. Shakef.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shakef.

3. A gradual rise.
Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach. Swift.

LADDE, n. f.
Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon lade, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the waters into the sea, or into some greater river. Gilpin's Camden.

TO LADE, v. a. preter. and part. passive, laded or laden. [from plasan, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.

1. To load; to freight; to burthen.
And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence.
Gen. xli. 26.
- The experiment which sheweth the weights of several bodies in comparison with water, is of use in lading of ships, and shewing what burthen they will bear. Bacon's Pb. Rem.
The vessels, heavy laden, put to sea
With prosperous winds; a woman leads the way. Dryden.
Though the peripatetic doctrine does not satisfy, yet it is as easy to account for the difficulties he charges on it, as for those his own hypothesis is laden with. Locke.

2. [plasan, to draw, Saxon.] To heave out; to throw out.
He chides the sea that sunders him from them,
Saying, he'll lade it dry to have his way. Shakef.
They never let blood; but say, if the pot boils too fast there is no need of lading out any of the water, but only of taking away the fire; and so they allay all heats of the blood by abstinence, and cooling herbs. Temple.
If there be springs in the slate marl, there must be help to lade or pump it out. Mortimer's Husband.

LADING, n. f. [from lade.] Weight; burthen.
Some we made prize, while others burnt and rent
With their rich lading to the bottom went. Waller.
The storm grows higher and higher, and threatens the utter loss of the ship: there is but one way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading overboard. South's Sermon.
It happened to be foul weather, so that the mariners cast their whole lading overboard to save themselves. L'Estrange.
Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

LADLE, n. f. [plazle, Saxon, from plasan; leugh, Erse.]
1. A large spoon; a vessel with a long handle, used in throwing out any liquid.
Some stir'd the molten ore with ladles great. Fa. Qu.
When the materials of glass have been kept long in fusion, the mixture casts up the superfluous salt, which the workmen take off with ladles. Boyle.

A ladle for our silver dish
Is what I want, is what I wish. Prior.

2. The receptacles of a mill wheel, into which the water falling turns it.

with a ladle-ful dribble his livery all the way up stairs. Sw.

LADY, n. f. [plazpiz, Saxon.]
1. A woman of high rank: the title of lady properly belongs to the wives of knights, of all degrees above them, and to the daughters of earls, and all of higher ranks.
I am much afraid, my lady, his mother, play'd false with a smith. Shakespeare's Merch. of Verona.
I would thy husband were dead; I would make thee my lady.

—I your lady, Sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.
I am sorry my relation to do serving a lady, should be any occasion of her danger and affliction. K. Charles.

2. An illustrious or eminent woman.
O foolish fairy's son, what fury mad
Hath thee incens'd to haste thy doleful fate?
Were it not better I that lady had,
Than that thou hadst repented it too late? Fairy Qu.
I love and hate her; for she's fair and royal,
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite
Than lad ladies; winning from each one
The best she hath, and fine of all compounded Out-fells them all. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Before Homer's time this great lady was scarce heard of. Rul.

LAG

May every lady an Evadne prove,
That shall divert me from Alafia's love. Waller.
Should I shun the dangers of the war,
With scorn the Trojans would reward my pains,
And their proud ladies with their sweeping trains. Dryden.
We find on medals the representations of ladies, that have given occasion to whole volumes on the account only of a face. Addison on ancient Medals.

Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests, and with champains rich'd,
With pletuous rivers, and wide-spread meads,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. A word of complaisance used of women.
Say, good Cæsar,
That I some lady trifles have refer'd,
Immonent toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal. Shakef. Ant. and Cl.
I hope I may speak of women without offence to the ladies. Guardian.

LADY-BEDSTRAW, n. f. [Gallium.] It is a plant of the stel-late kind; the leaves are neither rough nor knappy, and produced at the joints of the stalks, five or six in number, in a radiant form: the flower consists of one leaf, expanded toward the upper part, and divided into several segments; each of these flowers is succeeded by two dry seeds. Miller.

LADY-BIRD, n. f. A small red insect vaginopennous.
LADY-COW, n. f. A small red insect vaginopennous.
LADY-FLY, n. f. A small red insect vaginopennous.

Fly lady-bird, north, south, or east or west,
Fly where the man is found that I love best. Gay's Poet.
This lady-fly I take from off the grass,
Whose spotted back might fearle red purfaps. Gay.

Too lady-like a long fatigue to bear. Dry. Hind and Penth.

LADY-MANTLE, n. f. [Alchimilla.] The leaves are serrated, the cup of the flower is divided into eight segments, expanded in form of a star; the flowers are collected into bunches upon the tops of the stalks; each seed vessel generally contains two seeds. Mar.

LADYSHIP, n. f. [from lady.] The title of a lady.
Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring. Shakespeare.
If they be nothing but mere flatterers,
Your ladyship shall observe their gravity,
And their reservedness, their many cautions, Fitting their persons. Benj. Johnson's Cauteline.

I the wronged pen to please,
Make it my humble thanks express Unto your ladyship in these. Waller.
'Tis Galla; let her ladyship but peep. Dryden's Juv.

LADY'S-SLIPPER, n. f. [Calceolus.] It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves, four of which are placed in form of a cross, the other two pass the middle, one of which is bifid, and rests on the other, which is swelling, and shaped like a shoe; the empilement becomes a fruit, open on three sides, to which adhere the valves, pregnant with very small seeds like dust. Miller.

LADY'S-SMOCK, n. f. [Cardamine.] The flower consists of four leaves succeeded by narrow pods, which when ripe roll up, and cast forth their seeds: the leaves for the most part are winged. The first sort is sometimes used in medicine; the third sort is a very beautiful plant, continuing a long time in flower: they are preferred in botanick gardens, and some of them merit a place in some shady part of every curious garden, for their odd manner of casting forth their seeds on the slightest touch when the pods are ripe. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady's-smocks all silver white,
Do point the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.
See here a boy gathering lilies and lady-smocks, and there a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, all to make gar-lands. Waller's Agamemnon.

Lady's-smocks have small stringy roots that run in the ground, and comes up in divers places. Mortimer's Husbandry.

and lament over thee. Ezek. xxvii. 32.

Far less I now lament for one whole world
Of wicked sons destroyed, than I rejoice
For one man found to perfect and to just,
That God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 874.

To LAMENT. v. a. To bewail; to mourn; to bemoan; to sorrow for.

Come, now towards Chertsey with your holy load,
And still, as you are weary of this weight,
Rest you, while I lament king Henry's corse. Shakespeare.

The pair of eyes praise;
One pity'd, one condemn'd the woful times,
One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes. Dryden.

LAMENT. n. f. [lamentum, Latin, from the verb.]
1. Sorrow audibly expressed; lamentation; grief uttered in complaints or cries.

Long ere our approaching heard within Noise, other than the found of dance, or song!
Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage. Milton.

The loud laments arise,
Of one distress'd, and muffled mingled cries. Dryden.

2. Expression of sorrow.
To add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearse,
I must inform you of a dismal fight. Shakespeare Henry VI.

LAMENTABLE. adj. [lamentabilis, Latin; lamentable, French, from lament.]

1. To be lamented; causing sorrow.
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Shakespeare King Lear.

2. Mournful; sorrowful; expressing sorrow.
A lamentable tune is the sweetest music to a woful mind. Sidney.

The victors to their vessels bear the prize,
And hear behind loud groans, and lamentable cries. Dryden.

3. Miserable, in a ludicrous or low sense; pitiful; deprecable.
This bishop, to make out the disparity between the heathens and them, flies to this lamentable refuge. Stillingfleet.

LAMENTABLY. adv. [from lamentable.]
1. With expressions or tokens of sorrow; mournfully.
The matter in itself lamentable, lamentably expressed by the old prince, greatly moved the two princes to compassion. Sidney, b. ii.

2. So as to cause sorrow.
Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And links most lamentably. Shakespeare Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Pitifully; deprecably.
LAMENTATION. n. f. [lamentatio, Latin.] Expression of sorrow; audible grief.

Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakespeare R. III.

His sons buried him, and all Israel made great lamentation for him. 1 Mac. ii. 10.

LAMENTER. n. f. [from lament.] He who mourns or laments.
Such a complaint good company must pity, whether they think the lamenter ill or not. Spektator, No. 429.

LAMENTINE. n. f. A fish called a sea-cow or manatee, which is near twenty feet long, the head resembling that of a cow, and two short feet, with which it creeps on the shallows and rocks to get food; but has no fins: the flesh is commonly eaten. Bailey.

LAMINA. n. f. [Lat.] Thin plate; one coat laid over another.
LAMINATED. adj. [from lamina.] Plated: used of such bodies whose texture discovers such a disposition as that of plates lying over one another.

From the apposition of different coloured gravel arises, for the most part, the laminated appearance of a stone. Sharp.

To LAMM. v. a. To beat soundly with a cudgel. Diels.

LAMMAS. n. f. [This word is said by Bailey, I know not on what authority, to be derived from a custom, by which the tenants of the archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of mafs, on the first of August, to bring a lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day.
It may else be corrupted from lattermath.] The first of August.

In 1578 was that famous lammas day, which buried the reputation of Don John of Austria. Bacon.

LAMP. n. f. [lampe, French; lampas, Latin.]
1. A light made with oil and a wick.

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

To the mistle and lonely traveller?
In lamp furnaces I used spirit of wine instead of oil, and with the same flame has melted foliated gold. Boyle.

Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.

Thy gentle eyes send forth a quick'ning spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rowe.

Cynthia, fair regent of the night,
O may thy filyer lamp from heaven's high bow
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gib.

LAMPASS. n. f. [lampas, French.] A lump of flesh, about the bigness of a nut, in the roof of a horse's mouth, which rises above the teeth. Farrise's D. N.

His horse possest with the glanders, troubled with the lam-pass, infected with the fashions. Shakespeare.

LAMPBLACK. n. f. [lamp and black.] It is made by holding a torch under the bottom of a balon, and as it is furred strike it with a feather into some shell, and grind it with gum water. Peacocks on Drawing.

LAMPING. adj. [λαμπρινος.] Shining; sparkling.
Happy lines, on which with starry light
Those lamping eyes will deign sometimes to look. Spenser.

LAMPOON. n. f. [Bailey derives it from lampoon, a drunken song. It imports, let us drink, from the old French lampoon, and was repeated at the end of each couplet at carousals.
Treu.] A personal satire; abuse; censure written not to reform but to vex.

They say my talent is satire; if so, it is a fruitful age:
they have fown the dragon's teeth themselves, and it is but just they should reap each other in lampoons. Dryden.

Make satire a lampoon.
To LAMPOON. v. a. [from the noun.] To abuse with personal satire.

LAMPOONER. n. f. [from lampoon.] A scribbler of personal satire.

We are naturally displeased with an unknown critic, as the ladies are with a lampooner, because we are bitten in the dark. Dryden's En.

The squibs are those who are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Tatler, N. 88.

LAMPREY. n. f. [lamprey, French; lamprey, Dutch.]
Many fish much like the eel frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as, the lamprel, lamprey, and lamperne. Walton.

LAMPROM. n. f. A kind of sea fish.
These rocks are frequented by lamproms, and greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned. Notes on the Odyssey.

LANCE. n. f. [lance, French; lancea, Latin.] A long spear, which, in the heroic ages, seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback.

He carried his lances which were strong, to give a lancely blow. Sidney.

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtles breaks:
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it. Shakespeare.

They shall hold the bow and the lance. Jer. l. 42.
To LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pierce; to cut.
In fell motion,
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shakespeare.

In their cruel worship they lance themselves with knives. Glanville's Sep. a. 16.

Th' infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lanc'd
Her back, and piercing through her inmost heart, Drew backward. Dryden's Theod. and Hensira.

2. To open chirurgically; to cut in order to a cure.
We do lance
Diseases in our bodies. Shakespeare Ant. and Cleopatra.

Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more Than when it bites, but lanceth not the fore. Shakespeare.

That differs as far from our usual severities, as the lancing of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary. D. of Pi.

Lance the fore,
And cut the head; for till the core is found
The secret vice is fed. Dryden's Georg. l. 691.

The shepherd stands,
And when the lancing knife requires his hands,
Vain help, with idle prayers, from heav'n demands. Dryden.

LANCELY. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.
He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lancely blow. Sidney, b. ii.

LANCEPESADE. n. f. [lance spezzate, French.] The officer under the corporal: not now in use among us.

To th' Indies of her arm he flies,
Fraught both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain essay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancepedade. Cicero's Luc.

LANCEOT. n. f. [lancette, French.] A small pointed surgical instrument.

I gave vent to it by an aperture with a lancet, and discharged white matter.
It differeth from a vein, which in an apparent blue runneth along the body, and if dexterously pricked with a lancet, emitteth a red drop. Brown's Lunar Bruiers, b. ii.

Hippocrates faith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancet.

lancet or sword, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as not of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as in hooves. Arbutnot on ancient Coins.

To LANCER. v. a. [lancer, French.] This word is too often written lancab: it is only a vocal corruption of lance.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whose arm can lance the furer bolt,
And who's the better Jove. Dryden, and Lee's Oedipus.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore:
When Jove tremendous in the fable deeps,
Lanc'd his red lightning at our scatter'd ships. Pope.

LANCINATION. n. f. [from lancina, Latin.] Tearing; laceration.

To LANCINATE. v. a. [lancino, Latin.] To tear; to rend;
to lacerate.

LAND. n. f. [lane, Gothick, Saxon, and so all the Teuto-nick dialects.]

1. A country; a region; distinct from other countries.
All the nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite drowned and washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-bred people.
Spenser's State of Ireland.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

What had he done to make him fly the land? Shakespeare.
The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotic.

2. Earth; distinct from water.
The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline differed from the land-service, they had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.

He to-night hath boarded a land-carack;
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever. Shakespeare.

By land they found that huge and mighty country. Abbot.
With eleven thousand land-soldiers, and twenty-six ships of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy; and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Yet, if thou go'st by land, tho' grief possess
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less:
But ah! be warn'd to flun the wat'ry way. Dryden.

They turn their heads to sea, their stems to land,
And greet with greedy joy th' Italian strand. Dryden.

I writ not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden's Ennis.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land-carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Add. Freeholder.

The Phoenicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stopp'd not short, without pushing their trade to the Indies. Arbutnot on Coins.

The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea. Arbutnot.

3. Ground; surface of the place. Unusual.
Beneath his steely calque he felt the blow,
And roll'd, with limbs relax'd, along the land. Pope.

4. An estate real and immovable.
To forfeit all your goods, lands, and tenements,
Castles, and goods whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection. Shakespeare Henry VIII.

He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoyed certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia. Knolles.

This man is freed from servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.

5. Nation; people.
These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden.

6. Urine. [Pisus, Saxon.] As Probably this was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lant is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hammer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be dam'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-down him. Shakespeare Winter Tale.

To LAND. v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.
You shall hear
The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not fearing Britain. Shakespeare Cymbeline.

I told him of the army that was landed;
He laugh'd at it. Shakespeare's King Lear.

He who rul'd the roving wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
The compass'd pleads recourse,
And wand'ring late on the shore. Dryden's Hecate.

L A N

Another Typhis shall new seas explore,
Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore. Dryden.

To LAND. v. n. To come to shore.
Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakespeare Hen. V.

Land ye not, none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast within sixteen days. Bacon's New Atlantis.

I land, with luckless omens; then adore
Their gods. Dryden's Ennis.

LAND-FORCES. n. f. [land and force.] Warlike powers not naval; soldiers that serve on land.

We behold in France the greatest land-forces that have ever been known under any christian prince. Temple.

LAND'ED. adj. [from land.] Having a fortune, not in money but in land.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire. Shakespeare.
Men, whose living lieth together in one thire, are commonly counted greater landed than those whose livings are disperfed. Bacon's Collection of Good and Evil.

Cromwell's officers, who were for levelling lands while they had none, when they grew landed fell to crying up magna charta. Temple.

A house of commons must consist, for the most part, of landed men. Addison's Freeholder, No. 20.

LANDING-PLACE. n. f. [from land.] The top of stairs.
Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair, open newel, and a fair landing-place at the top. Bacon.

The landing-place is the uppermost step of a pair of stairs,
viz. the floor of the room you ascend upon. Moxon.

There is a stair-case that strangers are generally carried to see, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably well contrived. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

What the Romans called vestibulum was no part of the house, but the court and landing-place between it and the street. Arbutnot on Coins.

LANDLADY. n. f. [land and lady.]
1. A woman who has tenants holding from her.

2. The mistress of an inn.

term of reproach used by seamen of those who pass their lives on shore.

LANDLORD. n. f. [land and lord]
1. One who owns land or houses, and has tenants under him.
This regard shall he had, that in no place, under any landlord, there shall be many of them placed together, but dispersed. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The universal landlord. Shakespeare Ant. and Cleopatra.
It is a generous pleasure in a landlord, to love to see all his tenants look fat, sleek, and contented. Carrisso.

2. The master of an inn.
Upon our arrival at the inn, my companion fetched out the jolly landlord, who knew him by his whistle. Addison.

LANDMARK. n. f. [land and mark.] Any thing set up to preserve the boundaries of lands.

I th' midst, an altar, as the land-mark, stood,
Rustick, of grassy sod. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 432.

Then land-marks limited to each his Right;
For all before was common as the light. Dryden.

Though they are not self-evident principles, yet if they have

LAP

LANK. adj. [lancke, Dutch.]
 1. Loofe; not filled up; not ſtiffened out; not fat; not plump; ſlender.

The commons haſt thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
 Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakeſpeare.
 Name not Winterface, whoſe ſkin's ſlack,
 Lank, as an unthrift's purſe. Dome.

We let down into the receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lank, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much. Boyle.

Moſt earth produces corn and graſs, but both
 Too rank and too luxuriant in their growth.
 Let not my land ſo large a promiſe boaſt,
 Left the lank ears in length of ſtem be loſt. Dryden.

Now, now my bearded harveſt gilds the plain.
 Thus dreams the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on,
 Till his lank purſe declares his money gone. Dryden.

Mengre and lank with faſting grown,
 And nothing left but ſkin and bone;
 They juſt keep life and ſoul together. Swift.

2. Milton ſeems to uſe this word for faint; languid.
 He, piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
 And gave her to his daughters to imbath
 In nectar'd lavers ſtrew'd with alphodil. Milton.

LANKNESS. n. f. [from lank.] Want of plumpneſs.

LANKERN. n. f. [lanterne, French; laterna, Latin:] it is by miſtake often written lan'horn. A transparent caſe for a candle.

God ſhall be my hope,
 My ſlay, my guide, my lanthorn to my feet. Shakeſpeare.
 Thou art our admiral; thou beaſt the lanthorn in the poop, but 'tis in the noſe of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. i.

A candle laſteth longer in a lanthorn than at large. Bacon.
 Amongſt the excellent acts of that king, one hath the pre-eminence, the erection and inſtitution of a ſociety, which we call Solomon's houſe; the nobleſt foundation that ever was,
 and the lanthorn of this kingdom. Bacon's Atlantis.

O thievish night,
 Why ſhouldſt thou, but for ſome felonious end,
 In thy dark lanthorn thou cloſe up the ſtars,
 That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
 With everlaſting oil, to give due light
 To the miſſed and lonely traveller. Milton.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright ſide only to him that bears it, but looks black and diſmal in another's hand. Governor's Tong.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued ſhadow of the earth ſhould be broken by ſudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lantern-maker.
More's Divine Dialogues.

There are at Paris, Madrid, Liſbon, Rome, great hoſpitals, in the walls of which are placed machines in the ſhape of large lanthorns, with a little door in the ſide of them. Addiſon.

Our ideas ſucceed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the inſide of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle. Locke.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ſhips.
 Caprea, where the lanthorn fix'd on high
 Shines like a moon through the benighted Sky,
 While by its beams the wary ſailor ſteers. Addiſon.

LANTERN JAW. A term uſed of a thin viſage, ſuch as if a candle were burning in the mouth might tranſmit the light.
 Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn-jaws, he wrung his face into a hideous grimace. Addiſon's Speſtator, N^o. 173.

LANKINGOUS. adj. [lankingus, Latin.] Downy; covered with ſoft hair.
LAP. n. f. [leppe, Saxon; lappe, German.]

1. The looſe part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleaſure.
 If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the diſh. Swift's Directions to a Footman.

2. The part of the cloaths that is ſpread horizontally over the knees as one ſits down, ſo as any thing may lie in it.
 It feeds each living plant with liquid lap,
 And fills with flowers fair Flora's painted lap. Spencer.

Upon a day, as love lay ſweetly ſlumbering
 All in his mothers lap,
 A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murmur'ing,
 About him flew by hap. Spencer.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,
 And 'twixt ſweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakeſpeare.
 She bids you
 All on the wanton ruſhes lay you down,
 And reſt your gentle head upon her lap,
 And the will ſing the ſong that pleaſeth you. Shakeſpeare.

LAP

Let us rear
 The higher our opinion, that our ſtirling
 Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
 The ne'er-luſt-wearied Antony. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Heav'n's almighty fire
 Melts on the boſom of his love, and pours
 Himſelf into her lap in fruitful ſhow'rs. Craſhaw.

Men expect that religion ſhould coſt them no pains, and that happineſs ſhould drop into their laps. Tillotſon.
 He ſtruggles into breath, and cries for aid;
 Then, helpleſs, in his mother's lap is laid.
 He creeps, he walks, and iſſuing into map,
 Grudges their life from whence his own began;
 Retchleſs of laws, affects to rule alone,
 Anxious to reign, and reflects on the throne. Dryden.

To LAP. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To wrap or twiſt round any thing.
 He hath a long tail, which, as he deſcends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs, to keep himſelf from falling. Grew's Muſeum.

About the paper, whoſe two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was ſtiff like thin paſteboard, I lapped ſeveral times a ſlender thread of very black ſilk. Newton.

2. To involve in any thing.
 As through the ſlow'ring foreſt raſh the fled,
 In her rude hairs ſweet flowers themſelves did lap,
 And flouriſhing freſh leaves and bloſſoms did enwrap. Spencer.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a diſmal conflict,
 Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Confronted him. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

When we both lay in the field,
 Frozen almoſt to death, how he did lap me,
 Ev'n in his garments, and did give himſelf,
 All thin and naked, to the numb cold night. Shakeſpeare.

Ever againſt eating cares, Milton.
Lap me in ſoft Lydian airs.
 Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
 And ſmiling, broods upon the naked boy;
 Her garment ſpreads, and laps him in the folds,
 And covers with her wings from nightly colds. Dryden.

Here was the repository of all the wife contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up ſafely in the boſom of a Nero and a Caligula. Swift.

To LAP. v. n. To be ſpread or twiſted over any thing.
 The upper wings are opacous; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, tranſparent, like the wing of a fly. Grew.

To LAP. v. n. [lappian, Saxon; lappen, Dutch.] To feed by quick reciprocations of the tongue.
 The dogs by the river Nilus ſide being thirſty, lap haſtily as they run along the ſhore. Digby on bodies.

They had ſoups ſerved up in broad diſhes, and ſo the fox fell to lapping himſelf, and bade his gueſt heartily welcome. L'Eſtrange, Fab. 31.

The tongue ſerves not only for taſting, but for malica-tion and deglutition, in man, by licking; in the dog and cat kind, by lapping. Ray on Creation.

To LAP. v. a. To lick up.
 For all the reſt
 They'll take ſuggeſtion, as a cat laps milk. Shakeſpeare.

Upon a bull
 Two horrid Lyons ramp't, and ſci'd, and tugg'd off, bel-lowing ſtill,
 Both men and dogs came; yet they tore the hide, and lapt their fill. Chapman's Iliad, b. xviii.

LAPDOG. n. f. [lap and dog.] A little dog, fondled by ladies in the lap.
 One of them made his court to the lap-dog, to improve his intereſt with the lady. Collier.

Theſe if the laws did that exchange afford,
 Would ſave their lap-dog ſooner than their lord. Dryden.
Lap-dogs give themſelves the rowling ſhake,
 And ſleepleſs lovers juſt at twelve awake. Pope.

LAPFUL. n. f. [lap and full.] As much as can be contained in the lap.
 One found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild goards his lapful, and ſhred them into the pot of pottage. 2 Kings.

Will four per cent. increaſe the number of lenders? if it will not, then all the plenty of money theſe conjurers beſtow upon us, is but like the gold and ſilver which old women believe other conjurers beſtow by whole lapfuls on poor credulous girls. Locke.

LAPICIDE. n. f. [lapicida, Latin.] A ſtonecutter. Diel.
LAPIDARY. n. f. [lapidaire, Fr.] One who deals in ſtones or gems.

As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he eſpied a diamond; well (ſays he) this ſparkling foolery now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any uſe of mine, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't. L'Eſtrange.

Of all the many ſorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.

LAP

To LAPIDATE. v. a. [lapido, Latin.] To stone; to kill by stoning. Diſt.

LAPIDATION. n. f. [lapidatio, Lat. lapidation, Fr.] A stoning. LAPIDEOUS. adj. [lapideus, Latin.] Stony; of the nature of stone.

There might fall down into the lapideous matter, before it was concreted into a stone, some small toad, which might remain there imprisoned, till the matter about it were condensed. Ray on Creation.

LAPIDESCENT. n. f. [lapidesca, Latin.] Stony concretion.

Of lapis ceratites, or cornu fossile, in subterraneous cavities, there are many to be found in Germany, which are but the lapidescenties, and putrefactive mutations, of hard bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 22.

LAPIDESCENT. adj. [lapidescent, Latin.] Growing or turning to stone.

LAPIDIFICATION. [lapidification, French.] The act of forming stones.

Induration or lapidification of substances more soft, is another degree of condensation. Bacon's Natural History.

LAPIDIFIC. adj. [lapidifique, French.] Forming stones.

The atoms of the lapidific, as well as saline principle, being regular, do concur in producing regular stones. Grew.

LAPIDIST. n. f. [lapidist, Latin.] A dealer in stones or gems.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, being exalted to that degree, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the facitious stores of chemists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on Creation.

LAPIS. n. f. [Latin.] A stone.

LAPIS LAZULI.

The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore, very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, usually of the size of a man's fist, of an elegant blue colour, beautifully variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour: that of Asia and Africa is much superior to the Bohemian or German kind: it has been used in medicine, but the present practice takes no notice of it: to it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli. Hill.

LAPPER. n. f. [from lap.]

They may be lappers of linen, and bailiffs of the manor. Swift's Consideration on Two Bills.

One who laps or licks.

LAPPET. n. f. [diminutive of lap.] The parts of a head dress that hang loose.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lapetts, and ruffles, and mantuas. Swift.

LAPSE. n. f. [latfus, Latin.]

1. Flow; fall; glide.

Round I saw

Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,

And liquid lapse of murm'ring streams. Milton.

Notions of the mind are preserved in the memory, notwithstanding lapse of time. Hale's Original of Mankind.

2. Petty error; small mistake.

These are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 13.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most practically disowns it; and it is easier to persuade them of it from others lapses than their own. Glanville's Secp. c. 9.

This scripture may be usefully applied as a caution to guard against those lapses and failings, to which our infirmities daily expose us. Rogers's Sermon.

It hath been my constant business to examine whether I could find the smallest lapse in stile or propriety through my whole collection, that I might send it abroad as the most finished piece. Swift.

3. Translocation of right from one to another.

In a presentation to a vacant church, a layman ought to present within four months, and a clergyman within six, otherwise a devolution, or lapse of right, happens. Ayliffe.

To LAPSE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To glide slowly; to fall by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words, by retrenching the vowels, is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from whom we are descended, and whose languages labour all under the same defect. Swift's Letter to the Lord Treasurer.

2. To fail in any thing; to slip.

I have ever narrated my friends,

Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity

Would without lapsing suffer. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

To lapse in fulness

Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood

Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

3. To slip by inadvertency or mistake.

Homer, in his characters of Vulcan and Thersites, has lapsed into the burlesque character, and departed from that serious air essential to an epick poem. Add. Spectator.

Let there be no wilful perversion of another's meaning;

no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it. Watts.

3. To lose the proper time.

Myself stood out;

For which if I be lapsed in this place,

I shall pay dear. Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

As an appeal may be deferred by the appellant's lapsing the term of law, so it may also be deferred by a lapse of the term of a judge. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. To fall by the negligence of one proprietor to another.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months ensuuing, it lapses to the king. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To fall from perfection, truth or faith.

Once more I will renew

His lapsed pow'rs, though forfeit, and intrall'd

By sin to foul exorbitant desires. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Indeed the charge seems designed as an artifice of diversion, a sprout of that fig-tree which was to hide the nakedness of lapsed Adam. Decay of Piety.

All publick forms suppose it the most principal, universal, and daily requisite to the lapsing state of human corruption. Decay of Piety.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canon of Ancyra. Stillington's Disc. on Romish Idolatry.

LAPWING. n. f. [lap and wing.] A clamorous bird with long wings.

Ah! but I think him better than I say,

And yet would herein others eyes were worse:

Far from her nest the lapsing cries away;

My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse. Shak.

And how in fields the lapsing Tereus reigns,

The warbling nightingale in woods complains. Dryden.

LAPWORK. n. f. [lap and work.] Work in which one part is interchangeably wrapped over the other.

A basket made of porcupine quills: the ground is a pack-thread caul woven, into which, by the Indian women, are wrought, by a kind of lap-work, the quills of porcupines, not split, but of the young ones intire; mixed with white and black in even and indented waves. Grew's Microscop.

LAPBOARD. n. f.

The left-hand side of a ship, when you stand with your face to the head. Harris.

Or when Ulysses on the larboard thunn'd

Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd. Milton.

Tack to the larboard, and stand off to sea,

Veer starboard sea and land. Dryden.

LARCENY. n. f. [larcin, Fr. latrocinium, Lat.] Petty theft.

Those laws would be very unjust, that should chastize murder and petty larceny with the same punishment. Spektat.

LARCH. n. f. [Larix.]

The leaves, which are long and narrow, are produced out of little tubercles, in form of a painter's pencil, as in the cedar of Libanus, but fall off in winter; the cones are small and oblong, and, for the most part, have a small branch growing out of the top; these are produced at remote distances from the male flowers, on the same tree:

the male flowers are, for the most part, produced on the under side of the branches, and, at their first appearance, are very like small cones. Milton.

Some botanical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaeton into poplars, who ought to have been turned into larch trees; for that it is this kind of tree which sheds a gum, and is commonly found on the banks of the

Po. Addison on Italy.

LARD. n. f. [lardum, Latin; lard, French.]

1. The grease of swine.

So may thy pastures with their flow'ry scalls,

As suddenly as lard, fat thy lean beasts. Dante.

2. Bacon; the flesh of swine.

By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd,

And to the table sent the smoking lard;

On which with eager appetite they dine,

A sav'ry bit, that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden's Ovid.

The sacrifice they sped;

Chopp'd off their nervous thighs, and next prepar'd

T' involve the lean in cauls, and mend with lard. Dryden.

To LARD. v. a. [larder, French; from the noun.]

1. To stuff with bacon.

The larded thighs on loaded altars laid. Dryd. Homer.

No man lards salt pork with orange peel,

Or garnishes his lamb with spitch-cock eel. King.

2. To fatten.

Now Falstaff sweats to death,

And lards the lean earth as he walks along. Shakeſp.

And lards the lean earth as he walks along.

Brave soldier, doth he lie

Larding the plain. Shakeſp. Henry V.

I found, Horatio,

A royal knavery; an exact command,

Larded with many several sorts of reasons. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Let

LAR

Let no alien interpose
To lard with wit thy hungry Epſom prose. Dryden.

He lards with flourishes his long harangue, Dryd.

'Tis fine, sayst thou.

Swearing by heaven; the poets think this nothings, their plays are so much larded with it. Collier's View of the Stage.

LARDER. n. f. [lardier, old French; from lard.] The room where meat is kept or salted.

This similitude is not borrowed of the larder house, but out of the school house. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.

Flesh is ill kept in a room that is not cool; whereas in a cool and wet larder it will keep longer. Bacon.

So have I seen in larder dark,

Of veal a lucid loin. Dorset.

Old age,

Morose, perverse in humour, diffident

The more he fills abounds, the less content:

His larder and his kitchen too observes,

And now, left he should want hereafter, starves. King.

LARDERER. [larder.] One who has the charge of the larder.

LARDON. n. f. [French.] A bit of bacon.

LARGE. adj. [large, French; largus, Latin.]

1. Big; bulky.

Charles II. asked me, What could be the reason, that in mountainous countries the men were commonly larger, and yet the cattle of all sorts smaller. Temple.

Great Theron fell,

Great Theron, large of limbs, of giant height. Dryden.

Warwick, Leicester, and Buckingham, bear a large boned sheep of the best shape and deepest staple. Mortimer's Husb.

2. Wide; extensive.

Their former large peopling was an effect of the countries improving. Curew's Survey of Cornwall.

Let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for it is large enough for them. Gen. xxiv. 21.

There he conquered a thousand miles wide and large.

Abbot's Description of the World.

3. Liberal; abundant; plentiful.

Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large. Ezek.

Vernal funs and showers

Diffuse their warmth, larg'd influence. Thomson's Autumn.

4. Copious; diffuse.

Skippon gave a large testimony under his hand, that they had carried themselves with great civility. Clarendon, b. viii.

I might be very large upon the importance and advantages of education, and say a great many things which have been said before. Felton on the Classics.

5. At LARGE. Without restraint.

If you divide a cane into two, and one speak at the one end, and you lay your ear at the other, it will carry the voice farther than in the air at large. Bacon's Nat. History.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms

Reduce'd their shapes immense; and were at large,

Though without number still. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The children are bred up in their father's way; or so plentifully provided for, that they are left at large. Sprat.

Your zeal becomes importunate;

I've hitherto permitted it to rave

And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,

Left it should take more freedom than I'll give it. Addis.

6. At LARGE. Diffusely.

Discover more at large what cause that was,

For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

It does not belong to this place to have that point debated at large. Watts.

LARGELY. adv. [from large.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; diffusely.

Where the author treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations. Watts's Imp. on the Mind.

3. Liberally; bounteously.

How he lives and eats:

How largely gives; how splendidly he treats. Dryden.

Those, who in warmer climes complain,

From Phœbus' rays they suffer pain,

Must own, that pain is largely paid

By gen'rous wines beneath the shade. Swift.

4. Abundantly.

They their fill of love, and love's disport

Took largely; of their mutual guilt the seal. Milton.

LARGENESS. n. f. [from large.]

1. Bigness; bulk.

London excels any other city in the whole world, either in largeness, or number of inhabitants. Sprat's Sermons.

Nor must Bumastus, his old honours lose,

In length and largeness like the dugs of cows. Dryden.

2. Greatness; elevation.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeable-ness of temper. Collier of Friendship.

3. Extension; amplitude.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more

L A S

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.
Grim visaged war hath foot'd his wrinkl'd front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute. Shakeſp. Rich. III.
LASCIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from lascivious.] Wantonness; looseness.
The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviousness of his elegies, and his art of love. Dryd. Preface to Ovid.
LASCIVIOUSLY. adv. [from lascivious.] Leudly; wantonly; loosely.
LASH. n. f. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from schlagen, Dutch, to strike; whence lash and lash.]
1. A stroke with any thing pliant and tough.
From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of flogging lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryden's Æn.
Rous'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,
Our lion now will foreign foes assail. Dryden.
2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.
Her whip of cricketer's bone, her lash of film,
Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat. Shakeſp.
I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it. Addis. Spect.
3. A lash, or string in which an animal is held; a snare: out of use.
The farmer they leave in the lash,
With losses on every side. Tuſſer's Husbandry.
4. A stroke of satire; a sarcasm.
The moral is a lash at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well. L'Eſtrange.
To LASH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To strike with any thing pliant; to scourge.
Lucanus to lash his horses bends,
Prone to the wheels. Dryden.
Lets whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France. Shakeſp.
Let men out of their way lash on ever to fast, they are not at all the nearer their journey's end. South's Sermon.
He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd
He lash'd to duty with his sword of light. Dryden.
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden's Horace.
Stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden's Pers.
Leaning on his lance he mounts his car,
His fiery couriers lapping through the air. Garth's Ovid.
2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.
The club hung round his ears, and batter'd brows;
He falls; and lapping up his heels, his rider throws. Dryd.
3. To beat; to strike with a sharp sound.
The winds grow high,
Impending tempests charge the sky;
The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
And big waves lash the frighted shoars. Prior.
4. To scourge with satire.
Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain,
Flat'ners and bigots ev'n in Louis's reign. Pope's Horace.
5. To tie any thing down to the side or mast of a ship.
To LASH. v. n. To ply the whip.
They lash aloud, each other they provoke,
And lend their little souls at every stroke. Dryden's Æn.
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden's Persius.
Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;
The lapping whip rebounds. Gay's Trivia.
LASHER. n. f. [from lash.] One that whips or lashes.
LASS. n. f. [from lad is formed laddess, by contraction lass.
Hickes.] A girl; a maid; a young woman: used now only of mean girls.
Now was the time for vigorous lads to show
What love or honour could invite them to;
A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd. Waller.
A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, downright, plain-dealing lass it was. L'Eſtrange.
They sometimes an haſty kiſs
Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn,
And neck reclin'd, relent. Philips.
LASSITUDE. n. f. [laffitudo, Latin; laffitude, French.] Weariness; fatigue.
Laffitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all laffitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolliation. Bacon's Natural History.
Aſſiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without laffitude or distemper. Glanville, Scip. 14.
She lives and breeds in the air; for the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without laffitude.
More's Antidote against Atheism.
Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized

L A S

- with a laffitude, and thereby be tempted to nauseate, and grow tired. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
From mouth and nose the briny torrent ran,
And lost in laffitude lay all the man. Pope's Odyssey.
Laffitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distempered state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest: it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice, whereby the fibres are not supplied. Quincy.
LASSLORN. n. f. [laſſe and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistress.
Brown groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed batchelor loves,
Being lasslorn. Shakeſp. Tempest.
LAST. n. f. [laſte, Saxon; laſte, Dutch.]

The laughingstock of fortune's mockerie. Spenser's Fa. Qu.
Pray you let us not be laughingstocks to other men's humours. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Supine credulous frailty exposes a man to be both a prey and laughingstock at once. L'Estrange's Fables.
LAUGHTER. n. f. [from laugh.] Convulsive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.
To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in efferance; lives not in fear.
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary, or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. vii.
We find not that the laughter loving dame Mourn'd for Anchises. Waller.
Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.
LA'VISH. adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology.]
1. Prodigal; wasteful; indiscreetly liberal.
His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles, in his own defence. Dryd.
The dame has been too lavish of her feast,
And fed him till he loaths. Rouse's Jane Shore.
2. Scattered in waste; profuse.
3. Wild; unrestrained.
Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him, Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Curbing his lavish spirit. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
TO LAVISH. v. a. [from the adjective.] To scatter with profusion.
Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not th' impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands. Addis.
LA'VISH. n. f. [from lavish.] A prodigal; a profuse man.
LA'VISHLY. adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.
My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Then laughs the childish year with flowrets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.
Praise to a wit is like rain to a tender flower; if it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives; but if too lavishly, overcharges and depresses him. Pope.
LA'VISHMENT. n. f. [from lavish.] Prodigiousity; profusion.
LA'VISHNESS. n. f. [from lavish.] Prodigiousity; profusion.
First got with guile, and then preserv'd with dread,
And after spent with pride and lavishness. Fairy Queen.
TO LAUNCH. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lance, because a ship is pushed into water with great force.]
1. To force into the sea.
Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. Luke v. 4.
So short a stay prevails;
He soon equips the ship, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch. Dryden.
For general history, Raleigh and Howel are to be had.
He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whear. Locke.
2. To rove at large; to expatiate.
From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind.
Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.
In our language Spenser has not contented himself with this submissive manner of imitation; he launches out into very flow'ry paths, which still conduct him into one great road. Prior's Preface to Solomon.
He had not acted in the character of a suppliant, if he had launched out into a long oration. Broome's Odyssey.
I have launched out of my subject on this article. Arbut.

LAW

To LANCH. v. a.
 1. To p. sh. to sea.
 All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England.
 With stays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship.
 And roll'd on leavers, lawn b'd her in the deep. Pope.
 2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better be written lance.
 The King of Heav'n, obscure on high,
 Par'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
 His written bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
 Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook. Dryd.
 LAUND. n. f. [lande, French; lawn, Welsh.] Lawn a plain extended between woods. Hammer.
 Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves,
 For through this lawn anon the deer will come;
 And in this covert will we make our stand,
 Culling the principal of all the deer. Shaksp. Henry VI.
 LAUNDRESS. n. f. [lavandiere, French:] Skinner imagines that lavandresse may have been the old word.] A woman whose employment is to wash cloaths.
 The countess of Richmond would often say, On condition the princes of Christendom would march against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their laundress. Camden.
 Take up these cloaths here quickly; carry them to the laundress in Datchet mead. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 The laundress must be sure to tear her smocks in the washing, and yet wash them but half. Swift.
 LAUNDRY. n. f. [as if lavandrie.]
 1. The room in which clothes are washed.
 The affairs of the family ought to be consulted, whether they concern the stable, dairy, the pantry, or laundry. Swift.

 LAVOLTA. n. f. [la volte, French.] An old dance, in which was much turning and much capering. Hammer.
 Nor heel the high lavolt; nor sweeten talk;
 Nor play at subtle games. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
 LAUREATE. adj. [laureatus, Lat.] Decked or invested with a laurel.
 Bid Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
 And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
 To strew the laureate hearse where Lycid lies, Milton.
 Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines. Dunciad.
 LAUREATION. n. f. [from laureate.] It denotes, in the Scottish universities, the act or state of having degrees conferred, as they have in some of them a flowery crown, in imitation of laurel among the ancients.
 LAUREL. n. f. [laurus, Lat. laurier, French.] A tree, called also the cherry bay.
 It hath broad thick shining ever-green leaves, somewhat like those of the bay tree; the cup of the flower is hollow, and funnel-shaped, spreading open at the top, and is divided into five parts: the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose, having many stamina in the centre; the fruit, which is like that of the cherry tree, is produced in bunches, and the stone is longer and narrower than that of the cherry. Miller.
 The laurus or laurel of the ancients is affirmed by naturalists to be what we call the bay tree. Ainsworth.
 The laurel, meed of mighty conquerors,
 And poets sage. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
 The laurel or cherry-bay, by cutting away the side branches, will rise to a large tree. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 LAURELED. adj. [from laurel.] Crowned or decorated with laurel.
 Hear'st thou the news? my friend! th' express is come
 With laurel d' letters from the camp to Rome. Dryden.
 Then future ages with delight shall see How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's, looks agree;
 Or in fair series laurel d' bards be shown
 A Virgil there, and here an Addison. Pope.
 LAW. n. f. [laga, Saxon; loi, French; lawgh, Erse.]
 1. A rule of action.
 Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
 Of nature, pleading in his children's cause. Dryden.
 2. A decree, edict, statute, or custom, publicly established as a rule of justice.
 He hath resisted law,
 And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
 Than the severity of publick power. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 Thou art a robber,
 A law-breaker, a villain; yield thee, thief. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 Our nation would not give laws to the Irish, therefore now the Irish gave laws to them. Davies on Ireland.
 One law is split into two. Baker Reflect. on Learning.
 3. Judicial process.
 When every case in law is right. Shaksp. King Lear.
 Who has a breast so pure,
 But some uncleanly apprehensions
 Keep leets and law days, and in sessions sit,
 With meditations lawful. Shaksp. Othello.

LAW

Tom Touchy is a fellow famous for taking the law of every body: there is not one in the town where he lives that has not sued at a quarter-sessions. Addison's Spectator.
 4. Conformity to law; any thing lawful.
 In a rebellion,
 When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,
 Then were they chosen. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

 It is not lawful for thee to have her. Mat. xiv. 4.
 Gloster's bastard son was kinder to his father, than my daughters, got 'tween the lawful sheets. Shaksp. King Lear.
 LAWFULLY. adv. [from lawful.] Legally; agreeably to law. This bond is forfeit;
 And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
 A pound of flesh. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
 Though it be not against strict justice for a man to do those things which he might otherwise lawfully do, albeit his neighbour doth take occasion from thence to conceive in his mind a false belief, yet Christian charity will, in many cases, refrain a man. South's Sermons.
 I may be allowed to tell your lordship, the king of poets, what an extent of power you have, and how lawfully you may exercise it. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 LAWFULNESS. n. f. [from lawful.] Legality; allowance of law.
 I think it were an error to speak further, till I may see some sound foundation laid of the lawfulness of the action. Bacon's Holy War.
 LAWGIVER. n. f. [law and giver.] Legislator; one that makes laws.
 Solomon we esteem as the lawgiver of our nation. Bacon.
 A law may be very reasonable in itself, although one does not know the reason of the lawgiver. Swift.
 LAWGIVING. adj. [law and giving.] Legislative.
 Lawgiving heroes, fam'd for taming brutes,
 And raising cities with their charming lutes. Waller.
 LAWFLESS. adj. [from law.]
 1. Unrestrained by any law; not subject to law.
 The necessity of war, which among human actions is the most lawless, hath some kind of affinity with the necessity of law. Raleigh's Essay.
 The lawless tyrant, who denies
 To know their God, or message to regard,
 Must be compell'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
 Orpheus did not, as poets feign, tame savage beasts,
 But men as lawless, and as wild as they. Resolomon.
 Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
 Thy lawless wand'ring walks in open air. Dryd. Eu.
 Blind as the Cyclops, and as blind as he,
 They own'd a lawless savage liberty,
 Like that our painted ancestors for priz'd,
 Ere empire's arts their breasts had civiliz'd. Dryden.
 He Meteor-like, flames lawless through the void,
 Destroying others, by himself destroy'd. Pope.
 2. Contrary to law; illegal.
 Take not the quarrel from his powerful arms,
 He needs no indirect nor lawless course
 To cut off those that have offended him. Shaksp. R. III.
 We cite our faults,
 That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives. Shaksp.
 Thou the first, lay down thy lawless claim;
 Thou of my blood who bear'st the Julian name. Dryden.
 LAWFLESSLY. adv. [from lawless.] In a manner contrary to law.
 Fear not, he bears an honourable mind,
 And will not use a woman lawlessly. Shaksp. Lear.

 Stern beasts in trains that by his truncheon fell,
 Now grilly forms shoot o'er the lawns of hell. Pope.
 Interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
 Thin trees arise that slun each other's shades. Pope.
 2. [Linon, French.] Fine linen, remarkable for being used in the sleeves of bishops.
 Should'st thou bleed,
 To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear,
 Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair. Pope's Epica.

LAY

From high life high characters are drawn,
 A faint in crape is twice a faint in lawn. Pope.
 What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire:
 The duties by the lawn rob'd prelate pay'd,
 And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd! Tickell.
 LAWSUIT. n. f. [law and suit.] A process in law; a litigation.
 The giving the priest a right to the tithe would produce lawsuits and wrangles; his necessary attendance on the courts of justice would leave his people without a spiritual guide. Swift's Proposal.
 LAWYER. n. f. [from law.] Professor of law; advocate; pleader.
 It is like the breath of an unfeeling lawyer, you gave me nothing for it. Shaksp. King Lear.
 Is the law evil, because some lawyers in their office swerve from it? Whitgift.
 I have entered into a work touching laws, in a middle term, between the speculative and reverend discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers. Bacon's Holy War.
 The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes,
 When the defendant's council rose;
 And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
 With impudence own'd all the fact. Swift.
 LAX. adj. [laxus, Latin.]
 1. Loose; not confined; not closely joined.
 Inhabit lax, ye pow'rs of heav'n! Milton's Par. Lost.

Did they not swear to live and die
With Essex, and straight laid him by. Hudibras.
For that look, which does your people awe,
When in your throne and robes you give 'em law,
Lay it by here, and give a gentler smile. Waller.
Darkness, which fairest nymphs disarms,
Defends us ill from Mira's charms;
Mira can lay her beauty by,
Take no advantage of the eye,
Quit all that Lely's art can take,
And yet a thousand captives make. Waller.
Then he lays by the public care,
Thinks of providing for an heir;
Learns how to get, and how to spare. Denham.
The Tuscan king,
Laid by the lance, and took him to the sling. Dryden.
Where Dædalus his borrow'd wings laid by,
To that obscure retreat I chuse to fly. Dryden's Juvenal.
My zeal for you must lay the father by,
And plead my country's cause against my son. Dryden.
Fortune, conscious of your destiny,
E'en then took care to lay you softly by;
And wrapp'd your fate among her precious things,
Kept fresh to be unfolded with your king's. Dryden.
Dismiss your rage, and lay your weapons by,
Know I protect them, and they shall not die. Dryden.
When their displeasure is once declared, they ought not presently to lay by the severity of their brow, but restore their children to their former grace with some difficulty. Locke.
35. To LAY down. To deposit as a pledge, equivalent, or satisfaction.
I lay down my life for the sheep. John x. 15.

43. To LAY in. To store; to treasure.
Let the main part of the ground employed to gardens or corn be to a common flock; and laid in, and stored up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon's Essays.
An equal flock of wit and valour
He had laid in, by birth a taylor. Hudibras, p. i.
They saw the happiness of a private life, but they thought they had not yet enough to make them happy, they would have more, and laid in to make their solitude luxurious. Dryd.
Readers, who are in the flower of their youth, should labour at those accomplishments which may set off their persons when their bloom is gone, and to lay in timely provisions for manhood and old age. Addison's Guardian.
44. To lay on. To apply with violence.
We make no excuses for the obdurate: blows are the proper remedies; but blows laid on in a way different from the ordinary. Locke on Education.
45. To LAY open. To shew; to expose.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak,
Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your word's deceit. Shakespeare.
A fool layeth open his folly. Prov. xiii. 16.
46. To LAY over. To incrust; to cover; to decorate superficially.
Wo unto him that faith to the wood, awake; to the dumb stone, arise, it shall teach: behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it. Hab. ii. 19.
47. To LAY out. To expend.
Fathers are wont to lay up for their sons,
Thou for thy son art bent to lay out all. Milton.
Tycho Brahe laid out, besides his time and industry, much greater sums of money on instruments than any man we ever heard of. Boyle.
The blood and treasure that's laid out,
Is thrown away, and goes for nought. Hudibras.
If you can get a good tutor, you will never repent the charge; but will always have the satisfaction to think it the money, or all other, the best laid out. Locke.
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden.

L A Y

- My father never at a time like this
Would lay out his great soul in words, and waste
Such precious moments. Addison's Cato.
A melancholy thing to see the disorders of a household that is under the conduct of an angry statelwoman; who lays out all her thoughts upon the publick, and is only attentive to find out miscarriages in the ministry. Addison's Freeholder.
When a man spends his whole life among the stars and planets, or lays out a twelve-month on the spots in the sun, however noble his speculations may be, they are very apt to fall into burlesque. Addison on ancient Medals.
Nature has laid out all her art in beautifying the face; she has touch'd it with vermilion, planted in it a double row of ivory, and made it the seat of smiles and blushes. Addison.

Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to fore;
Backwards he bears. Daniel's Civil War.
54. To LAY together. To collect; to bring into one view.
If we lay all these things together, and consider the parts, rise, and degrees of his sin, we shall find that it was not for nothing. South's Sermons.
Many people apprehend danger for want of taking the true measure of things, and laying matters rightly together. L'Estr.
My readers will be very well pleased, to see so many useful hints upon this subject laid together in so clear and concise a manner. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 96.
One series of consequences will not serve the turn, but many different and opposite deductions must be examined, and laid together, before a man can come to make a right judgment of the point in question. Locke.
55. To LAY under. To subject to.
A Roman soul is bent on higher views,
To civilize the rude unpolish'd world,
And lay it under the restraint of laws. Addison's Cato.
56. To LAY up. To confine.
In the East-Indies, the general remedy of all subject to the gout, is rubbing with hands till the motion raise a violent heat about the joints; where it was chiefly used, no one was ever troubled much, or laid up by that disease. Temple.
57. To LAY up. To store; to treasure.
St Paul did will them of the church of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat by him upon the Sunday, and to reserve it in store, till himself did come thither, to send it to the church of Jerusalem for relief of the poor there. Hooker, b. iv. sect. 13.
Those things which at the first are obscure and hard, when memory hath laid them up for a time, judgment afterwards growing explaineth them. Hooker, b. v. sect. 22.
That which remaineth over, lay up to be kept until the morning. Exod. xvi. 23.
The king must preserve the revenues of his crown without diminution, and lay up treasure in store against a time of extremity. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

The blade off groaned under the blow. Spenser's Pastoral.

5. To LAY in for. To make overtures of oblique invitation.

I have laid in for these, by rebating the satire, where justice would allow it, from carrying too sharp an edge. Dryden.

6. To LAY on. To strike; to beat.

His heart laid on as if it try'd,
To force a passage through his side. Hudibras.

7. To LAY on. To act with vehemence.

My father has made her mistress
Of the feast, and she lays it on. Shakef. Winter's Tale.

8. To LAY out. To take measures.

Those ants knew some days after they had nothing to fear, and began to lay out their corn in the sun. Addis. Guard.

I made strict enquiry wherever I came, and laid out for intelligence of all places, where the intrails of the earth were laid open. Woodward.

LAY, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A row; a stratum.

A viol should have a lay of wire-strings below, as close to the belly as the lute, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge as in ordinary viols, that the upper strings stricken might make the lower resound. Bacon.

Upon this they lay a layer of stone, and upon that a lay of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A wager.

It is esteemed an even lay, whether any man lives ten years longer; I suppose it is the same, that one of any ten might die within one year. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

LAY, n. f. [ley, leay, Saxon; ley, Scottish.] Grassly ground; meadow; ground unplowed, and kept for cattle: more frequently, and more properly, written lea.

A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay
They saw. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

The plowing of layes is the first plowing up of grass ground for corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LAY, n. f. [lay, French. It is said originally to signify forrow or complaint, and then to have been transferred to poems written to express forrow. It is derived by the French from laffer, Latin, a funeral song; but it is found likewise in the Teutonic dialect: ley, leoc, Saxon; ley, Danish.] A song; a poem.

To the maiden's founding timbrels sung,
In well attuned notes, a joyous lay. Spens. Fairy Queen.

Soon he slumber'd, fearing not be harm'd,
The whiles with a loud lay, the thus him sweetly charm'd. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii.

This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charming lays. Shakefpeare's Tempest.

Nor then the solemn nightingale
Ceas'd warbling, but all night tun'd her soft lays. Milton.

If Jove's will
Have link'd that amorous power to thy soft lay,
Now timely sing. Milton.

He reach'd the nymph with his harmonious lay,
Whom all his charms could not incline to stay. Waller.

On Ceres let him call, and Ceres praise,
With uncouth dances, and with country lays. Dryd. Virg.

Ev'n gods incline their ravish'd ears,
And tune their own harmonious spheres
To his immortal lay. Dennis.

LAY, adj. [laicus, Latin; laikos, Greek.] Not clerical; regarding or belonging to the people as distinct from the clergy.

All this they had by law, and none repin'd,
The preference was but due to Levi's kind:
But when some lay preferment fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance. Dryden.

L A Z

Laz persons, married or unmarried, being doctors of the civil law, may be chancellors, officials, &c. Ayliffe's Parerg.

It might well startle
Our lay unlearned faith. Rowe's Ambitious Step Mother.

LAY, n. f. [from lay.]

1. A stratum, or row; a bed; one body spread over another.

A layer of rich mould beneath, and about this natural earth to nourish the fibres. Boyle's Natural History.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata or layers, placed one upon another, in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a flood in great quantity, will naturally be. Woodward's Natural History.

2. A sprig of a plant.

Many trees may be propagated by layers: this is to be performed by sitting the branches a little way, and laying them under the mould about half a foot; the ground should be first made very light, and, after they are laid, they should have a little water given them: if they do not comply well in the laying of them down, they must be pegged down with a hook or two; and if they have taken sufficient root by the next winter, they must be cut off from the main plants, and planted in the nursery: some twist the branch, or bare the rind; and if it be out of the reach of the ground, they fasten a tub or basket near the branch, which they fill with good mould, and lay the branch in it. Miller.

Transplant also carnation seedlings, give your layers fresh earth, and set them in the shade for a week. Boyle's Kal.

3. A hen that lays eggs.

The oldest are always reckoned the best fitters, and the youngest the best layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LAYMAN, n. f. [lay and man.]

1. One of the people distinct from the clergy.

Laymen will neither admonish one another themselves, nor suffer ministers to do it. Government of the Tongue.

Since a trait must be, he thought it best
To put it out of laymen's power at least,
And for their solemn vows prepar'd a priest. Dryden.

Where can be the grievance, that an ecclesiastical landlord should expect a third part value for his lands, his title as antient, and as legal, as that of a layman, who is seldom guilty of giving such beneficial bargains. Swift.

2. An image.

You are to have a layman almost as big as the life for every figure in particular, besides the natural figure before you. Dryden's Dufresne.

LAYSTALL, n. f. An heap of dung.

Scarce could he footing find in that foul way,
For many corles, like a great lay-stall
Of murdered men, which therein strewed lay. Fa. Q.

LAZAR, n. f. [from Lazarus in the gospel.] One deformed and nauseous with filthy and pestilential diseases.

They ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazars, by the hedges lay. Fairy Queen.

I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, the never shrow'd any but lazars. Shakefpeare's Trail and Cressida.

I am weary with drawing the deformities of life, and lazars of the people, where every figure of imperfection more resembles me. Dryden's Aurengzeib.

Lazar, n. f. [Lazarus, French; lazaretto, Italian; LAZARETTO, from lazar.] A house for the reception of the diseased; an hospital.

A place
Before his eyes appear'd, sad, noisome, dark,
A lazaretto it seem'd, where were laid Numbers of all diseases. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

LAZARWORT, n. f. A plant.

LAZILY, adv. [from lazy.] Idly; sluggishly; heavily.

Watch him at play, when following his own inclinations; and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time. Locke.

The eastern nations view the rising fires,
Whilst night shades us, and lazily retires. Crash.

LAZINESS, n. f. [from lazy.] Idleness; sluggishness; heaviness to action.

That instance of fraud and laziness, the unjust steward, who pleaded that he could neither dig nor beg, would quickly have been brought both to dig and to beg too, rather than starve. South's Sermons.

My fortune you have rescued, not only from the power of others, but from my own modesty and laziness. Dryden.

LAZING, adj. [from lazy.] Sluggish; idle.

The hands and the feet mutinied against the belly: they knew no reason, why the one should be laziness, and pampering itself with the fruit of the other's labour. L'Estrange.

The lot cried, Utinam hoc esset laborare, while he lay laziness and lolling upon his couch. South's Sermons.

LAZULI, n. f.

The ground of this stone is blue, veined and spotted with white.

white, and a glittering or metallick yellow: it appears to be composed of, first, a white sparry, or crystalline matter; secondly, flakes of the golden or yellow talc; thirdly, a shining yellow substance; this fumes off in the calcination of the stone, and casts a sulphurous smell; fourthly, a bright blue substance, of great use among the painters, under the name of ultramarine; and when rich, is found, upon trial, to yield about one-sixth of copper, with a very little silver. Woodward's Metallick Fossils.

LAZY, adj. [This word is derived by a correspondent, with great probability, from a laisse, French; but it is however Teutonic: lijfer in Danish, and lajsh in Dutch, have the same meaning; and Spelman gives this account of the word: Dividebantur antiqui Saxones, ut testatur Nithardus, in tres ordines; Edhilingos, Frilingos & Lazzos; hoc est nobiles, ingenuos & serviles: quam & nos distinctionem diu retinimus. Sed Ricardo autem secundo pars servorum maxima se in libertatem vindicavit; sic ut hodie apud Anglos rarior invenitur servus, qui mancipium dicitur. Restat nihilominus antiquae appellationis commemoratio. Ignavos enim hodie lazios dicimus.]

1. Idle; sluggish; unwilling to work.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fall gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shakef.

Wicked condemned men will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and spend victuals. Bacon.

Whose lazy waters without motion lay. Resfemman.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten with his sleep.

Like Eastern kings a lazy state they keep,
And close confin'd in their own palace sleep. Pope.

What amazing stupidity is it, for men to be negligent of salvation themselves? to sit down lazy and unactive. Rogers.

2. Slow; tedious.

The ordinary method for recruiting their armies, was now too dull and lazy an expedient to resist this torrent. Clarendon.

LEA, n. f. [ley, Saxon; a fallow; leag, Saxon, a pasture.] Ground inclosed, not open.

Greatly agast with this piteous plea;
Him rested the good man on the lea. Spens. Pastoral.

Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas
Of wheat, rye, barley, fetches, oats and peas. Shakef.

Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakefpeare's Henry V.

Dry up thy harrow'd veins, and plough-torn leas,
Whereof ingrateful man with liquor'd draughts,
And mortals unctuous, greases his pure mind. Shakef.

Such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise,
With the miming Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas. Milton.

LEAD, n. f. [leas, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold; for, though it is considerably lighter than quicksilver, as this wants malleability, it ought not to be reckoned in the class of metals.

Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoriae, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. Gold, or silver, or copper, become brittle on being mixed with lead in fusion; and, if lead and tin be melted together, the tin is thrown up to the surface in little dusty globes. Lead is found in various countries, but abounds particularly in England, in several kinds of soils and stones. The smoke of the lead works at Mendip in Somersetshire is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease; trees that grow near them have their tops burnt, and their leaves and outcides discoloured and scorched. Mill.

Thou art a foul in blis, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakefpeare's King Lear.

Of lead, some I can shew you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; heretofore it is made common cerus with vinegar; of cerus, red lead; of plumbum utrum, the bell yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on.

Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are mother'd up, heads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakefpeare's Coriolanus.

L E A

I would have the tower two stories, and goodly lead upon the top, raised with statues interpolated. Bacon.

To LEAD, v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with lead in any manner.

He fashioneth the clay with his arm, he applieth himself to lead it over; and he is diligent to make clean the fil-nace. Ezech. xxxviii. 30.

There is a traverse placed in a loft, at the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glass loaded with gold and blue, where the mother sitteth. Bacon.

To LEAD, v. a. preter. I led. [leean, Saxon; liden, Dutch.]

1. To guide by the hand.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully on the confined deep:
Bring me but to the very brim of it,
And I'll repair the misery, thou dost bear,
With something rich about me: from that place
I shall no leading need. Shakef. King Lear.

Doth not each on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? Luke xii. 15.

They thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill. Luke iv. 29.

2. To conduct to any place.

Save to every man his wife and children, that they may lead them away, and depart. 1 Sam. xxx. 22.

Then brought he me out of the way, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate. Ezek. xlvii. 2.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters. Psal. xxiii. 2.

3. To conduct as head or commander.

Would you lead forth your army against the enemy, and seek him where he is to fight? Spenser on Ireland.

He turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
And being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords, and rev'rend bishops, on
To bloody battles. Shakefpeare's Henry IV. p. i.

I wonder much,
Being men of such great leading as you are,
That you foresee not what impediments Drag back our expedition. Shakef. Henry IV. p. i.

If thou wilt have
The leading of thy own revenges, take
One half of my commission, and set down
As best thou art experienc'd. Shakefpeare's Coriolanus.

He led me on to mightiest deeds,
Above the nerve of mortal arm,
Against the uncircumcised, our enemies:
But now hath cast me off. Milton's Agonistes.

Christ took not upon him flesh and blood, that he might conquer and rule nations, lead armies, or possess places. South.

He might muster his family up, and lead them out against the Indians, to seek reparation upon any injury. Locke.

Since summer was full leafy. Shakespeare.
What chance, good lady, hath bereft you thus?
—Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth. Milton.
O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
The leafy forest, and the liquid main,
Extends thy uncontroul'd and boundless reign. Dryd.
Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,
That hosts of birds, that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.
So when some swelt'ring travellers retire
To leafy shades, near the cool sunless verge
Of Paraba, Brazilian stream; her tail
A grisly hydra suddenly shoots forth. Philips.
- LEAGUE. n. f. [ligue, French; ligo, Latin.]
1. A confederacy; a combination.
You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassy
From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.
And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth. Shakespeare.
We come to be informed by yourselves,
What the conditions of that league must be. Shakespeare.
Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Job v. 23.
Go break thy league with Baalham, that he may depart from me. 2 Chron. xvi. 3.
It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacis or leagues: there are other bands of society and implicit confederations. Bacon's Holy War.
1. a private person, whom my country
As a league breaker gave up bound, presum'd Single rebellion, and did hostile acts. Milton's Agamemnon.
Oh Tyrans, with immortal hate Pursue this race: let there be 'T'wixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon. Shak.
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where yon old filth views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryd. Theobitus.
LEAP-FROG. n. f. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.
If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakespeare's Henry V.
LEAP-YEAR. n. f.
Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more than year than in a common year:
so that the common year hath 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:
Divide by 4; what's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for past 1, 2, 3. Harris.
That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown's Vulg. Err.
TO LEARN. v. a. [learn, Saxon.]
1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.
Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Mat. xxiv. 32.
He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knalles.
Learn, wretches! learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of humankind. Dryd. Persius.
You may rely upon my tender care.
To keep him far from perils of ambition:
All he can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Philips.
2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.]
He would learn
The lion stoop to him in lowly-wifed,
A lesson hard. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i.
You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know not how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language. Shakespeare's Tempest.
A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shakef.
Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written. 1 Cor. iv. 6.
TO LEARN. v. n. To take pattern.
Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly. Mat. xi. 29.

not part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another.
Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 237.
LEARNED. adj. [from learn.]
1. Verified in science and literature.
It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.
Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile. Pope.
The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.
The best account is given of them by their own authors:
but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath.
Arbutnot on Coins.
2. Skilled; skillful; knowing.
Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,
Thou chusest not to conquer men but hearts. Granville.
3. Skilled in scholastic knowledge.
Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved; and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.
LEARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.
Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shakef. H. VIII.
The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad. Hooker.
Ev'ry coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.
LEARNING. n. f. [from learn.]
1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastic knowledge.
Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish;
then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when solid; and, lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays.
To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.
As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians,

LEA

- so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley's Sermon.
2. Skill in any thing good or bad.
An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long sithence forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.
LEARNER. n. f. [from learn.] One who is yet in his radiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.
The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.
Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skillful practised artist can. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
LEASE. n. f. [laiffer, French. Spelman.]
1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.
Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shakespeare.
Lords of the world have but for life their leases,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Denham.
I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops' leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.
2. Any tenure.
Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short'n'd hast thy own life's lease. Milton.
TO LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.
Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or proprietor, and the small tithes to the vicar. Ayliff's Paragon.
TO LEASE. v. n. [lesen, Dutch.] To glean; to gather what the harvest men leave.
She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chare-work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire. Dryden.
LEASER. n. f. [from lease.] Gleaner; gatherer after the reaper.
There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.
LEASH. n. f. [lesse, French; lesse, Dutch; laccio, Italian.] A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a couler leads his greyhound. Hammer.
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leash unwillingly. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
The ravish'd soul being flown such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. Boyle.
2. A tierce; three.
I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names. Shakef. Henry IV.
Some thought when he did gabble
Thad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras, p. i.

Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis's Letters.
TO LEASH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to hold in a string.
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shakef. Henry V.
LEASING. n. f. [leaze, Saxon.] Lies; falsehood.
O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasing? Psal. iv. 2.
He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell. Hub. Tale.
He hates foul leasings and vile flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Hubbard's Tale.
That false pilgrim which that leasing told,
Was indeed old Archimago. Spens. Fairy Queen.
I have ever narrified my friends
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbld past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leasing. Shakef. Coriolanus.
As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leasings,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lies defected;
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.
Trading freeth shall thrive again.
Nor leasings lead affright the swain. Gay's Pastoral.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.
TO LEAVE. v. a. pret. I left; I have left. [Of the derivation of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account]
1. To quit; to forsake.
A man shall leave his father and his mother, and cleave to his wife. Gen. ii. 24.
When they were departed from him, they left him in great dileases. 2 Chron. xxiv. 25.
If they love lees, and leave the luffy wine,
Envy them not their palates with the swine. B. Johnson.

consider, how much he may be beholden to experience. Locke.
8. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.
That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line,
That peace, Oh happy shade, be ever thine. Dryden.
9. To give up; to resign.
Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.
If a wife man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson, Sermon. 1.
10. To permit without interposition.
Whether Esau were a vassal, I leave the reader to judge.
Locke.
11. To cease to do; to desist from.
Let us return, left my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Sam. ix. 5.
12. To leave off. To desist from; to forbear.
If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Locke.

Addison's Spectator, N^o. 115.
13. To leave off. To forsake.
He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the streets: he put on a serious air. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
14. To leave out. To omit; to neglect.
My good Camillo;
I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakef. Winter's Tale.
Shua they to treat with me too?
No good lady,
You may partake: I have told 'em who you are.
I should be loth to be left out, and here too. Ben. Johnson.
What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.
Beside till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere nice morn on the Indian sleep
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep.
We ask, if those subvert
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert
That we the world's existence may conceive,
Though we one atom out of matter leave. Pluckmore.

LEC

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgment, by Tucca and Varius, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid. Addison on Italy.

TO LEAVE. v. n.

- To cease; to desist.
She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakespeare.
And since this business so far fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shakesp. H. IV.
He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest. Genes.
- To leave off. To desist.
Gritus, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevail'd. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait. Roscommon.
- To leave off. To stop.
Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin,
But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Daniel.
To leave. v. a. [from levy; lever, French.] To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhyme.
An army strong the leav'd,
To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii.

LE'AVED. adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

- Furnished with foliage.
- Made with leaves or folds.
I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isa. xlv. 1.

LE'AVEN. n. f. [levain, French; leaven, Latin.]

- Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of four dough mixed in a mass of bread.
It shall not be baken with leaven. Lev. vi. 17.
All fermented meats and drinks are easildest digested; and those unfermented, by barm or leaven, are hardly digested. Floyer.
- Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass.
Many of their propoitions favour very strong of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

TO LE'AVEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

- To ferment by something mixed.
You must tarry the leav'ning. Shakesp. Troil. and Cressida.
Whoever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exod. xii. 17.
Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings, and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon's Atlantid.
- To taint; to imbue.
That cruel something unpossest,
Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.

LE'AYER. n. f. [leaver.] One who deserts or forsakes.
Let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive. Shakespeare.

LEAVES. n. f. The plural of leaf.
Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all.
Bacon's Natural History.

LE'AVINGS. n. f. [from leave.] Remnant; relics; offal: it has no singular.
My father has this morning call'd together,
To this poor hall, his little Roman senate,
The leavings of Pharsalia. Addison's Cato.
Then who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Cloe's head, Swift.
With scraps and leavings to be fed.

LE'AVY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves; covered with leaves.
Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear,
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitontide to bear. Sidney.
Now, near enough: your leavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO LECH. v. a. [lecher, French.] To lick over. Hammer.
Hast thou yet leched the Athenian's eyes
With the love juice. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

LE'CHER. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old French:
luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.] A whorematter.
I will now take the lecher; he's at my house; he cannot 'scape me. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shakespeare.
The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now
In lo's place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.
The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes,
About his charming chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.
She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope's Odyss.

TO LE'CHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.
Die for adultery? no. The wren goes to's, and the small gilded fly does lecher in my sight. Shakespeare's King Lear.

LEE

Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night. B. Johnson.

LE'CHEROUS. adj. [from lecher.] Leud; lustful.
The sapphires should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Dryden.

LE'CHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.] Leudly; lustfully.

LE'CHEROUSNESS. n. f. [from lecherous.] Leudness.

LE'CHERY. n. f. [from lecher.] Leudness; lust.

The rest welter with as little shame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
Against such leudsters, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakespeare.

LE'CTION. n. f. [lectio, Lat.] A reading; a variety in copies.
Every critick has his own hypothesis: if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentic. Watts's Legick.

LE'CTURE. n. f. [lecture, French.]

- A discourse pronounced upon any subject.
Mark him, while Dametas reads his ruffick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat. Sidney, b. ii.
- Wrangling pedant,
When in music we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Shakespeare.
When letters from Cesar were given to Rusticus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lectures. Taylor's Holy Living.
Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and fasten there. Locke.
Numidia will be blest by Cato's lectures. Addison's Cato.
- The act or practice of reading; perusal.
In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text. Brown.
- A magisterial reprimand.
To lecture. v. a. [from the noun.]

- To instruct formally.
- To instruct insolently and dogmatically.

LE'CTURER. n. f. [from lecture.] An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture; a preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.
If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Clarendon.

LE'CTURESHIP. n. f. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.
He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person. Swift.

LED. part. pret. of lead.
Then shall they know that I am the Lord your God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezek. xxxix. 28.
The leaders of this people caused them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed. Isa. ix. 16.
As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

LEDGE. n. f. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

- A row; layer; stratum.
The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board. Watson's Architecture.
- A ridge rising above the rest.
The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Gulliver.
- Any prominence, or rising part.
Beneath a ledge of rocks his fleet he hides,
The bending brow above, a safe retreat provides. Dryden.

LEDHORSE. n. f. [led and horse.] A lumpter horse.

LEE. n. f. [lie, French.]

- Dregs; sediment; refuse.
My cloaths, my sex, exchang'd for thee, Prior.
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee.
[See term; supposed by Skinner from leau, French.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is to the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A leeward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way so good as she might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and shrouds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way.
If we, being storm-beaten in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet, and the Azores. Raleigh's Apology.
The Hollanders were wont to ride before Dunkirk with the wind at north west, making a lee shore in all weathers.
Raleigh's Essay.
Unprovided of tackling and victuallings, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore. King Charles.

LEE

Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foams
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff,
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fix'd anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Batter'd by his lee they lay,
The passing winds through their torn canvass play. Dryden.

LEECH. n. f. [lec, Saxon.]

- A physician; a professor of the art of healing: whence we still use cowleech.
A leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of griev'd conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was patience.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i.
- Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech
His cunning hand 'gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things else the which his art did teach. Fa. Qu.
Physick is their bane.

The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, depending of their art. Dryden.
Wife leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill;
Till some safe crisis. Dryden.
The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd,
Tried every health restoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Roscoe's J. Shore.

A skilful leech,
They say, had wrought this blessed deed;
This leech Arbuthnot was yelet. Gay's Pastorals.
A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood: it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.
I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Wise's Surg.
Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood,
Without remorse insatiably. Roscommon.

TO LEECH. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with medica-ments.

LEECHCRAFT. n. f. [leech and craft.] The art of healing.
We study speech; but others we persuade:
We leechcraft learn; but others cure with it. Davies.

LEEF. adj. [lieve, leue, Dutch.] Kind; fond.
Whilome all these were low and leef,
And lov'd their flocks to feed;
They never strove to be the chief,
And simple was their weed. Spenser's Pastorals.

LEEK. n. f. [leac, Saxon; leek, Dutch; leek, Erse.]
Its flower consists of six pedals, and is shaped, as it were, like a bell; in the center arises the point, which afterward becomes a roundish fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds: to these notes may be added, the flamina are generally broad and flat, ending in three capilla-ments, of which the middle one is furnished with a chive;
the flowers are also gathered into almost globular bunches:
the roots are long, cylindrical, and coated, the coats ending in plain leaves. Miller.

Know'st thou Florentin? — Yes.
— Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate;
Upon St. David's day. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear. Gay.
We use acid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes;
in the scurvy, water-creases, horse-radish, garlic, or leek potage. Floyer on Humours.

LEER. n. f. [pleane, facies, Saxon.]

- An oblique view.
I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Aside the devil turn'd
For envy, yet with jealous leer malign Ey'd them allance. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
- A laboured cast of countenance.
Damn with faint praise, concede with civil leer. Pope.
I place a statesman full before my sight;
A bloated mouster in all his gear,
With shameless visage, and perfidious leer. Swift.

TO LEER. v. n. [from the noun.]

- To look obliquely; to look archly.
I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
I wonder whether you taste the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.
- To look with a forced countenance.
Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,
To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin. Dryd.

LEES. n. f. [lie, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular.
This proceeded by reason of the old humour of those countries, where the memory of King Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees in the bottom of mens hearts; and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up. Bacon's Henry VII.
If they love lees, and leave the luty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the wine. B. Johnson.

LEG

Those lees that trouble it refine
The agitated soul of generous wine. Dryden.

TO LEESE. v. a. [lesen, Dutch.] To lose: an old word.
Then fell to thy profit both butter and cheese, Tusser.
Who buieth it sooner the more he shall leese.
No cause, nor client fat, will Chev'ril leese,
But as they come on both sides he takes lees;
And pleaseth both: for while he melts his grease
For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace. B. Johnson.
How in the port our fleet dear time did leese,
Withering like prisoners, which lie but for fees. Donne.

LEET. n. f.
Leet, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon lethe, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thirfling, and contained the third part of a province or shire:
these jurisdictions, one and other, be now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court. Cowell.

Who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit
With meditations lawful. Shakespeare's Othello.

You would present her at the leet,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shak.

LE'EWARD. adj. [lec and peap, Saxon.]

- Towards the wind. See LEE.
The classice were called long ships, the onerarie round, because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing; because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they failed full before the wind. Arbuth.
Let no statesman dare,
A kingdom to a ship compare;
Left he should call our commonweal
A vessel with a double keel;
Which just like ours, new rigg'd and man'd,
And got about a league from land,
By change of wind to leeward slide,
The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEFT. participle preter. of leave.
Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;
I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shakespeare.
Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.
Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it. Addison's Spectator, N. 179.

LEFT. adj. [luste, Dutch; leuus, Latin.] Sinistrous; not right.
That there is also in men a natural prepotency in the right, we cannot with constancy affirm, if we make observation in children, who permitted the freedom of both hands, do ofttimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

The right to Pluto's golden palace guides,
The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden's Æn.
The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak,
Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak;
That omen lik'd him not. Dryden.
The left foot naked when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dryden.
The man who struggles in the fight,
Fatigues left arm as well as right. Prior.

LEFT-HANDED. adj. [left and hand.] Using the left-hand rather than right.
The limbs are used most on the right-side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left-hand most. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver on the left-side is very monstrous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

B' ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand. Donne.

LEG. n. f. [leg, Danish; leggur, Icelandic.]

- The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.
They haste; and what their tardy feet deny'd,
The trusty staff, their better legs, supply'd. Dryden.
Purging comfits, and ants eggs,
Had almost brought him off his legs. Hudibras.
Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have rothing but legs to carry them. Addison's Guardian.

LEG

2. An act of obedience.
At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kifs his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
Their horses never give a blow, Hudibras, p. iii.
But when they make a leg, and bow. Locke.
If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Swift.
He made his leg, and went away.
3. To stand on his own legs; to support himself.
Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support. Collier of Friendship.
4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.
LEGACY. n. f. [legatus, Latin.]
Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament.
If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleadeth that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that theft, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can no-where by reading find. Hooker, b. iii.
Go you to Cæsar's house;
Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies. Shaksp. J. Cæsar.
Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange's Fables.
When he thought you gone
T' augment the number of the blest above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd, his brothers portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.
When the heir of this vast treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.
Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.
LEGAL. adj. [legalis, French; leges, Latin.]
1. Done or conceived according to law.
Whatever was before, was before time of memory; and what is since is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale's Hist. of the Common Law of England.
2. Lawful; not contrary to law.
His merits
To save them, not their own, though legal, works. Milt.
LEGALITY. n. f. [legalité, French.] Lawfulness.
To LEGALIZE. v. a. [legaliser, French; from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.
If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obliged person: but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of heaven, that no consideration can empower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it. South's Sermons.
LEGALLY. adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.
A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded. Taylor.
LEGATARY. n. f. [legataire, French; from legatum, Latin.] One who has a legacy left.
An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, as creditors and legataries are, unto the ordinary.
LEGATINE. adj. [from legatus.] Made by a legate.
When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution, that some one shall publish such absolution. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.
All those you have done of late,
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall in the compass of a premonition. Shakspere.
LEGATE. n. f. [legatus, Latin; legat, French; legato, Italian.]
1. A deputy; an ambassador.
The legates from th' Ætolian prince return:
Sad news they bring, that after all the cost,
And care employ'd, their embassy is lost. Dryden. Fiesco.
2. A kind of spiritual ambassador from the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.
Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heav'n. Shaksp.
Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before him. Atterbury.
LEGATEE. n. f. [from legatus, Lat.] One who has a legacy left him.
If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatees are blotted out. Dryden's Juvenal.
My will is, that if any of the above-named legatees should die before me, that then the respective legacies shall revert to myself.
LEGATION. n. f. [legatio, Latin.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

LEG

- It will be found, that after a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indication of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon's War with Spain.
In the attiring and ornament of their bodies the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion civility, as in his legations. Wotton.
LEGATOR. n. f. [from lego, Latin.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.
Suppose debate
Betwixt pretenders to a fair estate,
Bequeath'd by some legator's last intent. Dryden.
LEGEND. n. f. [legenda, Latin.]
1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.
Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nests which bred them abhorring them. Hooker, b. v.
There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of a frether date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
2. Any memorial or relation.
And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read. Fairfax, b. i.
3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.
Who can show the legends, that record
More idle tales, or fables so absurd. Blackmore.
It is the way and means of attaining to heaven, that makes profane scorners so willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent incredible legend. Bentley's Sermons.
4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.
Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Addison on Medals.
LEGER. n. f. [from legger, Dutch. To lie or remain in a place.] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a leger ambassador; a resident; one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a leger-book, a book that lies in the computing-house.
Lord Angelo, having affairs to heav'n,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leger. Shakspere.
I've giv'n him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of leggers for her sweet. Shakspere's Cymbeline.
If leger ambassadors or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, and to hold correspondence with them, such were made choice of as were vigilant.
Who can eender
Thy praise too much? thou art heav'n's leger here, Working against the states of death and hell. Herbert.
He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay leger for the covenant, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence. Clarendon, b. ii.
I call that a leger bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait which you have ever in motion. Walton.
LEGERDEMAIN. n. f. [contracted perhaps from legereté de main, French.] Slight of hand; jugglery; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception; knack.
He so light was at legerdemain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again. Hubbard.
Of all the tricks and legerdemain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention. South's Sermons.
LEGERETY. n. f. [legereté, French.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. A word not in use.
When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs though desunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerety. Shakspere.
LEGGED. adj. [from leg.] Having legs; furnished with legs.
LEGIBLE. n. f. [legibilis, Latin.]
1. Such as may be read.
You observe some clergymen with their heads held down within an inch of the cushion, to read what is hardly legible. Swift.
2. Apparent; discoverable.
People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprise in his air and motion; it stamps value and significance upon his face.
LEGIBLY. adv. [from legibilis.] In such a manner as may be read.
LEGION. [legio, Latin.]

1. A

LEG

1. A body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.
The most remarkable piece in Antoninus's pillar is, the figure of Jupiter Pluvius sending rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.
2. A military force.
She to foreign realms
Sends forth her dreadful legions. Philips.
3. Any great number.
Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd. Shaksp.
The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers's Sermons.
LEGIONARY. adj. [from legion.]
1. Relating to a legion.
2. Containing a legion.
3. Containing a great indefinite number.
Too many applying themselves betwixt jest and earnest, make up the legionary body of error. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
LEGISLATION. n. f. [from legislator, Lat.] The act of giving laws.
Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and, like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed. Littleton on the Conversion of St. Paul.
LEGISLATIVE. adj. [from legislator.] Giving laws; law-giving.
Their legislative frenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Denham.
The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.
LEGISLATOR. n. f. [legislator, Latin; legislatur, French.] A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.

The leisure of their answer. Shaksp. King Lear.
I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully, To be considered at his leisure. Locke.
3. Want of leisure. Not used.
More than I have said, loving countrymen;
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakspere's Richard III.
LEISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry.
He was the wretchedst thing when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if the rule were true, he should be gracious. Shakspere.
The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march. Hayward.
The bridge is human life: upon a more leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threefold and ten intire arches. Addison's Spectator, No. 159.
LEISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly.
The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or if with caution leisurely we pass,
Their numerous grofs might charge us one by one. Dryd.
We defended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison's Freeholder, No. 47.
LEMAN. n. f. [Generally supposed to be laimant, the lover, French; but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from leef, Dutch, or leof, Saxon, beloved and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leve-man.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress. Hammer.
Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye;
But vanquish'd, thine eternal bonds slave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take. Fa. 2u.
A cup of wine,
That's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Eurus and Zephyr. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
LEVANT. n. f. The east, particularly those coasts of the Mediterranean east of Italy.
LEVATOR. n. f. [Lat.] A chirurgical instrument, whereby depressed parts of the skull are lifted up.
Some surgeons bring out the bone in the bore; but it will be safer to raise it up with your levator, when it is but lightly retained in some part. Wise's Surgery.
LEUCOPHEGMACY. n. f. [from leucophegmatick.] Paleness, and droopings.
Spirits produce debility, flatulency, fevers, leucophegmacy, and droopings. Arbutnot on Ailments.
LEUCOPHEGMATICK. adj. [λευκός and φlegμα.] Having such a constitution of body where the blood is of a pale colour, viscid, and cold, whereby it stuffs and bloats the habit, or raises white tumours in the feet, legs, or any other parts; and such are commonly asthmatick and dropical. Quincy.
Asthmatic persons have voracious appetites, and for want of a right sangification are leucophegmatick. Arbutnot.
LEVÉE. n. f. [French.]
1. The time of rising.
2. The concourse of those who crowd round a man of power in a morning.

LEV

The fervile rout their careful Caesar praise;
Him they extol, they worship him alone;
They croud his levees, and support his throne.
Wouldst thou be first minister of state?
To have thy levees crouded with resort.
Of a depending, gaping, servile court. Dryden's Juvenal.
None of her Sylvan subjects made their court,
Levees and couches paid without resort. Dryden.
LEVEL. adj. [level, Saxon.]
1. Even; not having one part higher than another.
The garden, seated on the level floor,
She left behind, and locking ev'ry door,
Thought all secure. Dryden's Boocace.
Be level in preferments, and you will soon be as level in your learning. Bentley.
2. Even with any thing else; in the same line with any thing.
Our navy is addrested, our pow'r collected,
Our substitutes in absence well invested,
And ev'ry thing lies level to our wish. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
There is a knowledge which is very proper to man, and lies level to human understanding; and that is, the knowledge of our Creator, and of the duty we owe to him. Tillotson's Sermons.
To LEVEL. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To make even; to free from inequalities.
2. To reduce to the same height with something else.
Reason can never assent to the admission of those brutish appetites which would over-run the soul, and level its superior with its inferior faculties. Decay of Piety.
Behold the law
And rule of beings in your maker's mind:
And thence, like limbeck, rich ideas draw,
To fit the level'd use of humankind. Dryden.
3. To lay flat.
We know by experience, that all downright rains do evermore dissolve the violence of outrageous winds, and beat down and level the swelling and mountainous billows of the sea. Raleigh.
He will thy foes with silent shame confound,
And their proud structures level with the ground. Savily.
With unrelucted might the monarch reigns,
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And not regarding difference of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryden.
4. To bring to equality of condition.
5. To point in taking aim; to aim.
One to the gunners on St. Jago's tow'r,
Bid 'em for shame,
Level their canon lower. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
6. To direct to any end.
The whole body of puritans was drawn to be abettors of all villainy by a few men, whose designs from the first were levelled to destroy both religion and government. Swift.
To LEVEL. v. n.
1. To aim at; to bring the gun or arrow to the same direction with the mark.
The glory of God, and the good of his church, was the thing which the apostles aimed at, and therefore ought to be the mark whereto we also level. Hooker, b. iv.
2. To conjecture; to attempt to guess.
I pray thee overname them; and as thou namest them I will describe them; and, according to my description, level at my affection. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.
3. To be in the same direction with a mark.
He to his engine flew,
Plac'd near at hand in open view,
And rais'd it till it level'd right.
Against the glow-worm tail of kite. Hudibras, p. ii.
4. To make attempts; to aim.
Ambitious York did level at thy crown. Shakespeare.
LEVEL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A plane; a surface without protuberances or inequalities.
After draining of the level in Northamptonshire, innumerable mice did upon a sudden arise. Hale's Original of Mankind.
Those bred in a mountainous country overtize those that dwell on low levees. Savily's Travels.
2. Rate; standard.
Love of her made us raise up our thoughts above the ordinary level of the world, so as great clerks do not disdain our conference.
It might perhaps advance their minds so far Above the level of subjection, as To assume to them the glory of that war. Daniel.
The praises of military men inspired me with thoughts above my ordinary level. Dryden.
3. A state of equality.
The time is not far off when we shall be upon the level; I am resolv'd to anticipate the time, and be upon the level with them now: for he is so that neither seeks nor wants them. Attorney to Pope.
Providence,

LEV

Providence, for the most part, set us upon a level, and observes a kind of proportion in its dispensations towards us. Addison's Spectator, No. 255.
I suppose, by the stile of old friend, and the like, it must be somebody there of his own level; among whom his party have, indeed, more friends than I could wish. Swift.
4. An instrument whereby masons adjust their work.
The level is from two to ten feet long, that it may reach over a considerable length of the work: if the plumb-line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is set flat down upon the work, the work is level; but if it hangs on either side the perpendicular, the floor or work must be raised on that side, till the plumb-line hang exactly on the perpendicular. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
5. Rule: borrowed from the mechanick level.
Be the fair level of thy actions laid,
As temperance wills, and prudence may persuade,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.
6. The line of direction in which any missile weapon is aimed.
I stood i' th' level
Of a full charg'd confederacy, and gave thanks
To you that choked it. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.
7. The line in which the sight passes.
Fir'd at first fight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
While from the bounded level of our mind
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind. Pope.
LEVELLER. n. f. [from level.]
1. One who makes any thing even.
2. One who destroys superiority; one who endeavours to bring all to the same state of equality.
You are an everlasting leveler; you won't allow encouragement to extraordinary merit. Collier on Pride.
LEVELNESS. n. f. [from level.]
1. Evenness; equality of surface.
2. Equality with something else.
The river Tiber is express'd lying along, for so you must remember to draw rivers, to express their levelness with the earth. Peasam.
LEVELIN. n. f. [levelin, French.]
1. Ferment; that which being mixed in bread makes it rise and ferment.
2. Any thing capable of changing the nature of a greater mass; any thing that tinctures the whole.
The matter fermenteth upon the old levain, and becometh more acid. Wise's Surgery.
As to the pestilential levains conveyed in goods, it is a false opinion. Arbutnot on Air.
LEVELER. n. f. [levelier, French.]
The second mechanical power, is a balance supported by a hypomochlion; only the centre is not in the middle, as in the common balance, but near one end; for which reason it is used to elevate or raise a great weight; whence comes the name lever.
Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Some draw with cords, and some the monster drive
With rolls and levers. Denham.
In a lever, the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight; which is always by so much lesser, as the disproportion betwixt the weight and the power is greater, and the motion itself more easy. Wile's Magick.
Some hoisting levers, some the wheels prepare. Dryden.
You may have a wooden lever, forked at the ends. Arbutnot.
LEVELIER. [levelier, French.] A young hare.
Their travels o'er that silver field does show,
Like track of levers in morning snow. Waller.
LEVET. n. f. [from lever, French.] A blast on the trumpet; probably that by which the soldiers are called in the morning.
He that led the cavalcade;
Wore a fowgelder's flagellet,
On which he blew as strong a levet;
As well-see'd lawyer on his briefcase. Hudibras.
LEVEROOK. n. f. [layere, Saxon.] This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the lark.
The smaller birds have their particular seasons; as, the leverook. Waller's Angler.
If the lufft sae 'twill smooze aw the leverooks. Scott's Poem.
LEVYABLE. adj. [from levy.] That may be levied.
The sums which any agreed to pay, and were not brought in, were to be levied by course of law. Bacon's Laws VII.
LEVATHAN. n. f. [לִיָּאָן] A water animal mentioned in the book of Job. By some imagined the crocodile, but in poetry generally taken for the whale.

LEW

We may, as bootless, spend our vain command
Upon th' enraged soldiers in their spoil,
As send our precepts to th' Leviathan, Shakespeare's Henry V.
To come ashore. Job.
Canst thou draw out Leviathan with a hook?
More to embroil the deep; Leviathan,
And his unwieldy train, in dreadful sport
Tempest the loosen'd brine. Thomson's Winter.
TO LEVIGATE. v. a. [levigo, Latin.]
1. To rub or grind to an impalpable powder.
2. To mix till the liquor becomes smooth and uniform.
The chyle is white, as consisting of salt, oil, and water, much levigated or smoothed. Arbutnot on Ailments.
LEVIGATION. n. f. [from levigate.]
Levigation is the reducing of hard bodies, as coral, tutty, and precious stones, into a subtil powder, by grinding upon marble with a muller; but mules the instruments are extremely hard, they will so wear as to double the weight of the medicine. Quincy.
LEVITE. n. f. [levita, Latin, from Levi.]
1. One of the tribe of Levi; one born to the office of priesthood among the Jews.
In the Christian church, the office of deacon succeeded in the place of the levites among the Jews, who were as ministers and servants to the priests. Aspliff's Parergon.
2. A priest: used in contempt.
LEVITICAL. adj. [from levite.] Belonging to the levites; making part of the religion of the Jews.
By the levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death; so heinous a crime was the sin of adultery. Aspliff's Parergon.
LEVITY. n. f. [levitas, Latin.]
1. Lightness; not heaviness: the quality by which any body has less weight than another.
He gave the form of levity to that which ascended; to that which descended, the form of gravity. Raleigh.
This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the fluidity that encloses it, would necessarily ascend to the top. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Inconstancy; changeableness.
They every day broached some new thing; which restless levity they did interpret to be their growing in spiritual perfection. Hooker.
Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-knots strive,
Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive,
This erring mortals levity may call. Pope.
3. Unsteadiness; laxity of mind.
I unbosom'd all my secrets to thee;
Not out of levity, but over-pow'r'd
By thy request. Milton's Agonistes.
4. Idle pleasure; vanity.
He never employed his omnipotence out of levity or ostentation, but as the necessities of men required. Colony.
5. Trifling gaiety; want of seriousness.
Our graver business frowns at this levity. Shakespeare.
Hopton abhorred the licence, and the levities, with which he saw too many corrupted
That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished, and a spirit of levity and libertinism, immorality and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons.
TO LEVY. v. a. [levar, French.]
1. To raise; to bring together men.
He resolv'd to finish the conquest of Ireland, and to that end levied a mighty army. Davies on Ireland.
2. To raise money.
Levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war. Numb.
Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his county such a sum of money. Clarendon.
3. To make war. This sense, though Milton's, seems improper.
They live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars. Milton.
LEVY. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of raising money or men.
They have already contributed all their superfluous hands, and every new levy they make must be at the expense of their farms and commerce. Addison's State of the War.
2. War raised.
Tyron has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing
Can touch him further. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
LEWD. adj. [leude, Saxon.]
1. Lay; not chaste. Obsolete.
For lay / n in this book I writ.
So these great clerks their little wisdom shew
To mock the lewd, as learn'd in this as they. Davies.
2. Wicked; bad; naughty.
If some be admitted into the ministry, either void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.
Before

LIB

Before they did oppress the people, only by colour of a law custom, they did afterwards use the same oppressions by warrant. Davies on Ireland.

3. Lufful; libidinous.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Then lewd Anchemolus he laid in dust,
Who stain'd his stepdame's bed with impious lust. Dryden.

LE'WDLY. adj. [from lewd.]

1. Wickedly; naughtily.

A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,
Have practis'd dangerously against your state. Shakespeare.

2. Libidinally; lustfully.

He lov'd fair lady Elfred, lewdly lov'd,
Whose wanton pleasures him too much did please,
That quite his heart from Guendeline remov'd. Spenser.

So lewdly dull his idle works appear,
The wretched texts deserve no comments here. Dryden.

LE'WDNESS. n. f. [from lewd.] Lustful licentiousness.

Suffer no lewdness, nor indecent speech,
Th' apartment of the tender youth to reach. Dryd. Juven.

Damianus's letter to Nicholas is an authentick record of the lewdness committed under the reign of celibacy. Atterbury.

LE'WDSTER. n. f. [from lewd.] A lecher; one given to criminal pleasures.

Against such lewdsters, and their lechery, Shakespeare.

Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakespeare.

LE'WTS D'OR. n. f. [French.] A golden French coin, in value twelve livres, now settled at seventeen shillings. Dict.

LEXICOGRAPHY. n. f. [αλεξικλον and γραφω; lexicographie, French.] A writer of dictionaries; a harmless drudge, that busies himself in tracing the original, and detailing the signification of words.

Commentators and lexicographers acquainted with the Syriac language, have given these hints in their writings on scripture. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

LEXICOGRAPHY. n. f. [αλεξικλον and γραφω.] The art or practice of writing dictionaries.

LEXICON. n. f. [αλεξικλον.] A dictionary; a book teaching the signification of words.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet if he had not studied the solid things in them as well as the words and lexicons, yet he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yeoman competently wife in his mother dialect only. Milton.

LEY. n. f.

Ley, lee, lay, are all from the Saxon leag, a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter x or g. Gilpin's Cam.

LI'ABLE. n. f. [liable, from liar, old French.] Obnoxious; not exempt; subject.

But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burthenome,
Proudly secure, yet liable to fall
By weakest subtleties. Milton's Agonistes.

The English boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them want'd genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures. Dryden's Juvenal.

This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to many defects. Swift.

LIAR. n. f. [from lie.] This word would analogically be liar; but this orthography has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from liar, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it. One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity.

She's like a liar, gone to burning hell!
'Twas I that kill'd her. Shakespeare's Othello.

He approves the common liar, fame,
Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, whosoever it seems to be contradicted. Boyle.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part,
Wife is thy voice, and noble is thy heart. Pope's Odyssey.

LI'ARD. adj.

1. Mingled roan.

2. Liard in Scotland denotes gray-haired; as, he's a liard old man.

LI'BA'TION. n. f. [libatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacrifice, or libation to the earth. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The wine so poured.

They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men.

The goblet then she took, with nectar crown'd,
Sprinkling the first libations on the ground. Dryden's Æn.

LIB

LI'BEARD. n. f. [libard, German; leopardus, Lat.] A leopard.

Make the libard stern,
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i.

The libard, and the tiger, as the mole
Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw. Milton.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Pilo resembled to a libard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the different of habitations, or towns of Africk. Brerewood.

LI'BEL. n. f. [libellus, Latin; libelle, French.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory; every such libel here becomes panegyric there. Decay of Piety.

Good heav'n! that fots and knaves should be so vain,
To wish their vile resemblance may remain!
And stand recorded, at their own request, Dryden.

To future days, a libel or a jest.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person in court.

To LI'BEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation; generally written or printed.

Sweet frauls to fly about the streets of Rome:
What's this but libelling against the senate? Shakespeare.

He, like a privileg'd spy, whom nothing can Discredit, libels now 'gainst each great man. Donne.

To LI'BEL. v. a. To satirise; to lampoon;

Is then the peage of England any thing dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? if he be libelled, or any way defamed, he has his scandalum magnatum to punish the offender. Dryden.

But what so pure which envious tongues will spare?
Some wicked wits have libelled all the fair. Pope.

LI'BEILER. n. f. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality. Dryden's Juvenal.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners. Taylor.

The common libellers, in their invectives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth, equally common to all bodies of men. Swift.

LI'BELOUS. n. f. [from libel.] Defamatory.

It was the most malicious surmise that had ever been brew'd, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet. Wotton.

1. Not mean; not low in birth; not low in mind.

2. Becoming a gentleman.

3. Munificent; generous; bountiful; not parcimonious.

Her name was Mercy, well known over all
To be both gracious and eke liberal. Spens. Fa. Queen.

Sparing would shew a worse sin than ill doctrine.
Men of his way should be most liberal,
They're set here for examples. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Needs must the pow'r
That made us, and for us this ample world,
Be infinitely good, and of his good
As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. Bacon's Essay.

The liberal are secure alone;
For what we frankly give, for ever is our own. Granville.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, are, in their sermons, very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

LIBERALITY. n. f. [liberalitas, Latin; liberalité, Fr.] Munificence; bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows to court
With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shakespeare.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine;
That liberality is but cast away,
Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay. Donham.

LIBERALLY. adv. [from liberal.] Bounteously; bountifully; largely.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. James i. 5.

LI'BERTINE. n. f. [libertin, French.]

1. One unconfin'd; one at liberty.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

2. One who lives without restraint or law.

Man, the lawless libertine, may rove
Free and unquestion'd. Rowe's Jane Shore.

Want of power is the only bound that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the sex. Clarissa.

LIB

2. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of couzenage,
As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye;
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

That word may be applied to some few libertines in the audience. Collier's View of the Stage.

3. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their conditions, as libertines against their patrons. Ayliffe's Parergon.

LI'BERTINE. adj. [libertin, French.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are men that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent enquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals. Swift's Project for Advancement of Religion.

LI'BERTINISM. n. f. [from libertine.] Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism of infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

LI'BERTY. n. f. [liberté, French; libertas, Latin.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears, he'll turn me away. Shakespeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heav'nly bright!
Profuse of blis, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where aly one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

3. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Davies.

4. Relaxation of restraint.

5. Leave; permission.

I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which, with some men, has the same authority. Locke.

LI'BERDINOUS. n. f. [libidinofus, Latin.] Lewd; lustful.

None revolt from the faith; because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinofus thoughts had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless. Bentley.

LI'BERDINOUSLY. adv. [from libidinofus.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LI'BRAL. adj. [liberalis, Latin.] Of a pound weight. Dict.

LI'BRARIAN. n. f. [librarius, Latin.]

1. One who has the care of a library;

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charydis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves: this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarians. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

LI'BRARY. n. f. [libraris, Fr.] A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they 'gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to avise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An ancient book, high Briton's monuments. Fa. Qu.

Make choice of all my library,
And so beguile thy sorrow. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To LI'BRATE. v. a. [libro, Latin.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise.

LI'BRATION. n. f. [libratio, Latin; libration, French.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration, of the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

In loose librations stretch'd, to trust the void Trembling refuse. Thomson's Spring.

2. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that, at full moon, they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptick, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Dict. Trev.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

LI'BRATORY. adj. [from libra, Lat.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,
And clammy dews, that loathsome lice beget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden's Virg.

LI'CEBASE. n. f. [lice and bane.] A plant.

LICENSE. n. f. [licentia, Latin; licence, French.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Mufidorus their chief. Sidney.

Taunt my faults
With such full licences, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

They baul for freedom in their senseless moods,
And still revolt when truth would set them free;
Licence they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to licence by too just a name. Ressemmon.

Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence; though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself.

2. A grant of permission. Locke.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate. Judith xi. 14.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addison on Italy.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself. Act.

To LI'CEUSE. v. a. [licencier, French.]

1. To set at liberty.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he listed he could license his thoughts. Wotton.

2. To permit by a legal grant.

Wit's titans brav'd the skies,
And the presb groan'd with licens'd blasphemies. Pope.

LICENTIA. n. f. [licentia, low Latin.]

1. A man who uses license.

The licentia somewhat licentious, least they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter, if the sense fall aptly. Camden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of a licentiate or master in this faculty. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To LI'CENTIATE. v. a. [licentier, French.] To permit; to encourage by license.

We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse. L'Estrange.

LICENTIOUS. n. f. [licencieux, French; licentious, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages pride, like corn-fed steed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat swollen encase,
To all licentious lust, and gan exceed
The measure of her mean, and natural first need. Fa. Qu.

Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate. Shakespeare.

2. Presumptuous; unconfined.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course. Ressemmon.

LICENTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.] With too much liberty; without just restraint.

LIC

The licentiates somewhat licentious, lest they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter. Camden's Remains.
LICENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from licentious.] Boundless liberty;
 contempt of just restraint.
 One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Ral.
 This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty. Swift.
 During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.
LICH. n. f. [lice, Saxon.] A dead carcase; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.
LICHOWL. n. f. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretell death.
TO LICK. v. a. [liccan, Saxon; lecken, Dutch.]
 1. To pass over with the tongue.
Esculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcered wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs. Temple.
 A bear's a savage beast;
 Whelp'd without form, until the dam
 Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras, p. i.
 He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
 And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews. Dryden.
 I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste. Addison.
 2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.
 At once pluck out
 The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
 The sweet which is their poison. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 3. To lick up. To devour.
 Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass. Numb. xxii. 4.
 When luxury has lick'd up all thy self,
 Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself:
 Think how posterity will treat thy name. Pope's Horace.
LICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; rough usage: a low word.
 He turned upon me as round as a chafed boar, and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.
LICKERISH. adj. [liccepa, a glutton, Saxon.]
LICKEROUS. adj. [liccepa, a glutton, Saxon.]
 1. Nice in the choice of food; squeamish.
 Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.
 2. Eager; greedy.
 Then is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, wherof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.
 Strephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know
 That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;
 But lickerous, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sidney.
 Certain rare manuscripts, fought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits, liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Watson.
 In vain he profer'd all his goods to save
 His body, destin'd to that living grave;
 The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,
 And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.
 In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.
 3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite.
 Wouldst thou seek again to trap me here
 With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton.
LICKERISHNESS. n. f. [from lickerish.] Niceness of palate.
LICORICE. n. f. [γλυκύριζα; liquoricia, Italian; glycyrrhiza, Latin.] A root of sweet taste.
Liquorice hath a papilionaceous flower; the pointal which arises from the empalement becomes a short pod, containing several kidney-shaped seeds; the leaves are placed by parts joined to the mid-rib, and are terminated by an odd lobe. Miller.
Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, void of sinell, and of a taste sweeter than sugar, it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany.
 This root is excellent in coughs, and all disorders of the lungs. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill's Materia Medica.
LICTOR. n. f. [Latin.] A beadle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.
 Saucy lictors
 Will catch at us like strumpets. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

LIE

PROCONSULS to their provinces
 Having, or on return, in robes of state,
Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milton.
 Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake
 His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;
 Though in his country-town no lictors were,
 Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden's Jæval.
LID. [plio, Saxon; lied, German.]
 1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; a lid, cover, or stopple that enters the mouth.
 Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.
 2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.
 Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,
 Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 Our eyes have lids, our ears still open we keep. Darwin.
 The fields fair eyes saw her, and saw no more,
 But shut their flow'ry lids for ever night,
 And winter strew'd her way.
 That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,
 As any muse's tongue could speak;
 When from its lid a pearly tear
 Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek. Prior.
 The rod of Hermes
 To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
 And drive departed souls to Styx;
 That rod was just a type of Sid's,
 Which o'er a British senate's lids
 Could scatter opium full as well,
 And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.
LIE. n. f. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.
 Chamber-lie breads reas like a loach. Shakspere.
 All liquid things concocted by heat become yellow; as,
 lie, wort, &c. Peachum on Drawing.
LIE. n. f. [lige, Saxon.]
 1. A criminal falsehood.
 My name's Macbeth.
 —The devil himself could not pronounce a title
 More hateful to mine ear.
 —No; nor more fearful.
 —Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
 I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakspere's Macbeth.
 A lie is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant, or intended, that is properly a lie. South.
 Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lie, than the will can chuse an apparent evil. Dryden.
 When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, this is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea; but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watson's Logic.
 2. A charge of falsehood.
 That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,
 That it shall render vengeance and revenge;
 Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest
 In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shaksp. Rich. II.
 It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.
 Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with their tenets. Locke.
 3. A fiction.
 The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply;
 The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.
TO LIE. v. n. [liegan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]
 1. To utter criminal falsehood.
 I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakspere's Othello.
 If a foul lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore that which was delivered.
Levit. vi. 1.
 Should I lie against my right?
 Inform us, will the emper'or treat?
 Or do the prints and papers lie?
TO LIE. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lien. [liegan, Saxon; liggen, Dutch.]
 1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.
 2. To rest; to lean upon.
 Death lies on her like an untimely flow'r;
 Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shakspere.
 Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee. Epitaph on Vauquelin.

LIE

3. To be deposited in the grave.
 All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house. Isa. xiv. 18.
 I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in your burying place. Gen. xlvii. 30.
 4. To be in a state of decumbiture.
 How many good young princes would do so; their fathers lying so sick as yours at this time is. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 My little daughter lieth at the point of death; I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed. Mark v. 23.
 5. To pass the time of sleep.
 The watchful traveller,
 That by the moon's mistaken light did rise,
 Lay down again, and clos'd his weary eyes. Dryden.
 Forlorn he must, and persecuted lie;
 Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.
 6. To be laid up or deposited.
 I have seen where copperas is made great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.
 7. To remain fixed.
 The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lien at their hearts. Temple.
 8. To reside.
 If thou dost well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door. Gen. iv. 7.
 9. To be placed or situated.
 We have gone through deserts, where there lay no way. Wisd. v. 7.
 I fly
 To those happy climes that lie,
 Where day never shuts his eye,
 Up in the broad fields of the sky. Milton.
 There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryd.
 Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Collier of Envy.
 The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.
 What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea. Locke.
 10. To press upon.
 Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Psal. lxxxviii. 7.
 He that commits a sin shall find
 The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind,
 Though bribes or favour shall assist his cause. Creech.
 Shew the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Leonora. Addison.
 11. To be troublesome or tedious.
 Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least what lay upon their hands, in chemistry, it cannot be denied but princes may pass their time advantageously that way. Temple.
 I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands. Addison's Guardian.
 12. To be judicially fixed.
 If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakspere.
 13. To be in any particular state.
 If money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakspere.
 The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth. Isa.
 The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still. Exod.
 Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement. Watson's Improvement of the Mind.
 14. To be in a state of concealment.
 Many things in them lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight. Locke.
 15. To be in prison.
 Your imprisonment shall not be long;
 I will deliver you, or else lie for you. Shaksp. Rich. III.
 16. To be in a bad state.
 Why will you lie pining and pinching yourself in such a loneliness, starving course of life?
 The generality of mankind lie pecking at one another, till one by one they are all torn to pieces. L'Estrange's Fab.
 Are the gods to do your drudgery, and you lie bellowing with your finger in your mouth? L'Estrange's Fables.
 17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.
 To be a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion. Collier.
 It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man, lying under a sharp fit of the stone for a week, receives from this fine sentence. Tillotson's Sermons.
 As a man should always be upon his guard against the vices to which he is most exposed, so we should take a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct. Addison's Freeholder.

LIE

The maintenance of the clergy is precarious, and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be defrauded. Swift.
 18. To consist.
 The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.
 —It lies much in your holding up; haste you speedily to Angelo. Shakspere's Measure for Measure.
 He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour, forgets the early rising, and hard riding of huntmen. Locke.
 19. To be in the power; to belong to.
 He shews himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it, as much as in him lies. Stillfleet on Idolatry.
 Do'st thou endeavour, as much as in thee lies, to preserve the lives of all men. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.
 Mars is the warrior's god; in him it lies
 On whom he favours to confer the prize. Dryden.
 20. To be charged in any thing; as, an action lieth against one.
 21. To cost; as, it lies me in more money.
 22. To lie at. To importune; to tease.
 23. To lie by. To rest; to remain still.
 Ev'ry thing that heard him play,
 Ev'n the billows of the sea,
 Hung their heads, and then lay by;
 In sweet musick is such art,
 Killing care, and grief of heart,
 Fall asleep, or hearing die. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
 24. To lie down. To rest; to go into a state of repose.
 The leopard shall lie down with the kid. Isa. xi. 6.
 The needy shall lie down in safety. Isa. xiv. 30.
 25. To lie down. To sink into the grave.
 His bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust. Job xx. 11.
 26. To lie in. To be in childbed.
 As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to lie in and sleep, or to lounge themselves in the sun-shine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser on Ireland.
 You confine yourself most unreasonably. Come; you must go visit the lady that lies in. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 She had lain in, and her right breast had been apostemated. Wise man's Surgery.
 The doctor has practised both by sea and land, and therefore cures the green sickness and lyings in. Spellator.
 When Florimel design'd to lie privately in;
 She chose with such prudence her pangs to conceal,
 That her nurse, nay her midwife, scarce heard her once squeal. Prior.
 Hysterical affections are contracted by accidents in lying in. Arbutnot on Diet.
 27. To lie under. To be subject to.
 A generous person will lie under a great disadvantage.
 This mistake never ought to be imputed as a fault to Dryden, but to those who suffered so noble a genius to lie under the necessity of it. Pope's Notes on the Iliad.
 Europe lay then under a deep lethargy, and was no otherwise to be rescued but by one that would cry mightily. Atterb.
 28. To lie upon. To become an obligation or duty.
 These are not places merely of favour, the charge of souls lies upon them; the greatest account whereof will be required at their hands. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 It should lie upon him to make out how matter, by undirected motion, could at first necessarily fall, without ever erring or miscarrying, into such a curious formation of human bodies. Bentley's Sermons.
 29. To lie with. To converse in bed.
 Pardon me, Bassanio,
 For by this ring the lay with me. Shakspere.
LIEF. adj. [leof, Saxon; liefs, Dutch.] Dear; beloved.
 My liefs! lord, she thus beguiled had,
 For he was flesh; all flesh doth frailty breed. Fa. Qu.
 You, with the rest,
 Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;
 And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
 My liefs! liege to be mine enemy. Shaksp. Henry VI.
LIEF. adv. Willingly.
 If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
LIEGE. adj. [lige, French; ligis, Italian; ligius, low Latin.]
 1. Bound by some feudal tenure; subject: whence liege man for subject.
 2. Sovereign. [This signification seems to have accidentally risen from the former, the lord of liege men, being by mistake called liege lord.]
 Did not the whole realm acknowledge Henry VIII, of famous memory, for their king and liege lord. Spenser.

L I E

My lady liege, said he,
What all your sex desire is sovereignty. Dryden.
So much of it as is founded on the law of nature, may be filed natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God our liege lord, so as to act in all things according to his will. Grew's Cosmology.
LIEGE. n. f. Sovereign; superior lord.
O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears
I had foretold this dear and deep rebuke. Shakespeare.
The other part reserv'd I by consent,
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt. Shakespeare.
You with your best endeavour have stirred up
My liefeft liege to be mine enemy. Shakespeare.
The natives, dubious whom
They must obey, in conformation wait
Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege. Philips.
LIEGEMAN. n. f. [from liege and man.] A subject.
This liegeman 'gan to wax more bold,
And when he felt the folly of his lord,
In his own kind, he 'gan himself unfold. Fairy Queen.
Sith then the ancestors of those that now live, yielded themselves then subjects and liegemen, shall it not eye their children to the same subjection? Spenser on Ireland.
Stand, ho! who is there?
—Friends to this ground, and liegemen to the Dane. Shak.
LIEGER. n. f. [from liege.] A resident ambassador.
His passions and his fears
Lie liegers for you in his breast, and there Negotiate your affairs. Denham's Sophy.
LIE. n. f. [from liege.] One that rests or lies down; or remains concealed.
There were liers in ambush against him behind the city.
Job viii. 14.
LIEU. n. f. [French.] Place; room; it is only used with in:
in lieu, instead.
God, of his great liberality, had determined, in lieu of man's endeavours, to bestow the same by the rule of that justice which best becometh him. Hooker, b. i.
In lieu of such an increase of dominion, it is our business to extend our trade. Addison's Freeholder.
LIEVE. adv. [See LIEP.] Willingly.
Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town crier had spoke my lines. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Action is death to some sort of people, and they would as lieve hang as work. L'Estrange.
LIEUTENANCY. n. f. [lieutenancy, French; from lieutenant.]
1. The office of a lieutenant.
If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenancy, it had been better you had not killed your three fingers for off. Shakespeare's Othello.
2. The body of lieutenants.
The list of undisputed masters, is hardly so long as the list of the lieutenancy of our metropolis. Felton on the Classics.
LIEUTENANT. n. f. [lieutenant, French.]
1. A deputy; one who acts by vicarious authority.
Whither away so fast?
—No farther than the tower,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
—We'll enter all together,
And in good time here the lieutenant comes. Shakespeare.
I must put you in mind of the lords lieutenants, and deputy lieutenants, of the counties: their proper use is for ordering the military affairs, in order to oppose an invasion from abroad, or a rebellion or sedition at home. Bacon.
Killing, as it is considered in itself without all undue circumstances, was never prohibited to the lawful magistrate, who is the vicegerent or lieutenant of God, from whom he derives his power of life and death. Bramhall against Hobbes.
Sent by our new lieutenant, who in Rome,
And hence from me, has heard of your renown:
I come to offer peace. Philips's Briton.
2. In war, one who holds the next rank to a superior of any denomination; as, a general has his lieutenant generals, a colonel his lieutenant colonel, and a captain simply his lieutenant.
It were meet that such captains only were employed as

L I F

have formerly served in that country, and been at least lieu- tenants there. Spenser on Ireland.
According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship. Wotton.
The earl of Essex was made lieutenant general of the army; the most popular man of the kingdom; and the darling of the sword men. Clarendon.
His lieutenants, engaging against his positive orders, being beaten by Lysander, Alcibiades was again banished. Swift.
Canst thou so many gallant soldiers see,
And captains and lieutenants fight for me.
LIEUTENANTSHIP. n. f. [from lieutenant.] The rank or office of lieutenant.
LIFE. n. f. plural lives. [Lipian, to live, Saxon.]
1. Union and co-operation of soul with body.
On thy life no more.
—My life I never held but as a paw
To wage against thy foes; nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive. Shakespeare's King Lear.
She shews a body rather than a life.
A statue than a breather. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Gen. i. 20.
The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.
So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And steal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.
2. Present state.
O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for 'other!
Dream of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,
Is more a solid thing than thou!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities;
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,
But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.
When I consider life 'tis all a cheat,
Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lies more; and when it says we shall be blest
With some new joy, takes off what we possess.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give:
I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.
Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind

LiGHTNESS. n. f. [from light.]
1. Levity; want of weight; absence of weight.
Some are for masts of ships, as fir and pine, because of their length, straightness, and lightness. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Suppose many degrees of lightness and lightness in particles;
so as many might float in the air a good while before they fell. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness.
For, unto knight there is no greater shame,
Than lightness and inconstancy in love. Fairy Queen.
Of two things they must chuse one; namely, whether they would, to their endless disgrace, with ridiculous lightness, dismiss him, whose restitution they had in so important manner desired, or else condescend unto that demand. Hooker.

As I blow this feather from my face,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the gentlest gulf;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shakespeare.

3. Unchastity; want of conduct in women.
Is it the disdain of my estate, or the opinion of my lightness, that have emboldened such base fancies towards me?
Sidney, b. ii.

Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense,
Than woman's lightness. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

4. Agility; nimbleness.
LiGHTNING. n. f. [from lighten, lightening, lightning.]
1. The flash that attends thunder.
Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and there ending, so that it is only momentaneous. Muschenbroek.
Sense thinks the lightning born before the thunder;
What tells us then they both together are? Davies.
Salmonus, full'ring cruel pains I found
For emulating Jove; the rattling found
Of mimic thunder, and the glittering blaze
Of pointed lightnings, and their forked rays. Dryd. Æn.
No warning of the approach of flame,
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd,
I burnt the moment I beheld. Granville.

2. Mitigation; abatement.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
We were once in hopes of his recovery, upon a kind mel-lodge from the widow; but this only proved a lightning before death. Addison's Spectator, No. 517.

LiGHTS. n. f. [supposed to be called so from their lightness in proportion to their bulk.] The lungs; the organs of breathing.

quick sense, so no fear for any sharp disease. Hayward.

LiGHTSOME. adj. [from light.]
1. Luminous; not dark; not obscure; not opaque.
Neither the sun, nor any thing sensible is that light itself, which is the cause that things are lightsome, though it make itself, and all things else, visible; but a body most enlightened, by whom the neighbouring region, which the Greeks call æther, the place of the supposed element of fire, is effected and qualified. Raleigh.
White walls make rooms more lightsome than black. Bac.
Equal posture, and quick spirits, are required to make colours lightsome. Bacon's Nat. History.

The Sun
His course exalted through the Ram had run Through Taurus, and the lightsome realms of love. Dryd.

2. Gay; airy; having the power to exhilarate.
It suiteth so fitly with that lightsome affection of joy, wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him. Hooker.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that which now often usurps the name; that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South's Sermon.

LiGHTSOMENESS. n. f. [from lightsome.]
1. Luminousness; not opacity; not obscurity; not darkness-ness. It

L I K

It is to our atmosphere that the variety of colours, which the trees of lignales which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the water. Nun. xxiv. 6.

LiGNEOUS. adj. [ligneus, Latin; ligneux, French.] Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.
It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more ligneous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn: now the covers, and the true body of each seed, the parenchymous and ligneous part of both, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define. Grew's Cosmol.

LIGNUM/VITÆ. n. f. [Lat.] Guaiacum; a very hard wood.
It hath pinnated leaves; the flower consists of several petals, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose; the point of the flower, which arises from the center of the calyx, becomes a fleshy, roundish, stony fruit, or the stony seeds are surrounded with a thin pulp. Miller.

the bulk of the ships never the like. Bacon's War with Spain.
Albeit an eagle did bear away a lamb in her talons, yet a raven endeavouring to do the like was held entangled. Hayw.
One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more;
A third the like. Daniel's Civil War.

By conversation with his like to help,
Or solace his defects. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
Two likes may be mistaken. L'Estrange's Fab.
She'd study to reform the men,
Or add some grains of folly more,
To women than they had before;
This might their mutual fancy strike,
Since every being loves its like. Swift.

2. Near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just.
Report being carried secretly from one to another in my ship, had like to have been my utter overthrow. Raleigh.

LiKE. adv.
1. In the same manner; in the same manner as.
The joyous nymphs, and lightfoot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet;
Now hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went. Spenser.

L I K

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. Psal. ciii. 13.
Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful?
Is this to be like-minded with Christ, who was meek and lowly? Tillotson's Sermons.

What will be my confusion, when he sees me Neglected, and forsaken like himself. Philips's Dist. Mather.
They roar'd like lions caught in toils, and rag'd:
The man knew what they were, who heretofore
Had seen the like lie murder'd on the shore. Waller.

2. In such a manner as befits.
Be strong, and quit yourselves like men: 1 Sam. iv. 9.

3. Likely; probably. A popular use not analogical.

the design. Clarendon, b. viii.
We like our present circumstances well, and dream of no change. Aitken's Sermons.

2. To approve; to view with approbation, not fondness.
He stayed behind to bring the shepherds with whom he meant to confer to breed the better Zelma's liking, which he only regarded. Sidney, b. i.
Though they did not like the evil he did, yet they liked him that did the evil. Sidney, b. ii.
He grew content to mark their speeches, then to marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company. Sidney.
He proceeded from looking to liking, and from liking to loving. Sidney.

For several virtues
I have lik'd several women; never any
With so full soul. Shakespeare's Tempest.
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare.
Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself. South's Sermons.

Beasts can like, but not distinguish too,
Nor their own liking by reflection know. Dryden.

3. To please; to be agreeable to. Now disused.
Well hoped he, ere long that hardy guest,
If ever covetous hand, or lustful eye,
Or lips he laid on thing that lik'd him best,
Should be his prey. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Say, my fair brother now, if this device
Do like you, or may you to like entice. Hobbes's Tale.

There let them learn, as likes them, to despise
God and Messiah. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

To LiKE. v. n.
1. To be pleased with, with of before the thing approved.
Obsolete.
Of any thing more than of God they could not by any means like, as long as whatsoever they knew besides God, they apprehended it not in itself without dependancy upon God. Hooker, b. i.
The young soldiers did with such cheerfulness like of this resolution, that they thought two days a long delay. Kneller.
It is true, there are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write: and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring of the parts. Dryden.

2. To chuse; to list; to be pleased.
The man likes not to take his brother's wife. Dent. xxv. 7.
He that has the prison doors set open is perfectly at liberty,

By any likelihood he shew'd to-day?
That with no man here he is offended. Shakespeare.

2. Resemblance; likeness. Obsolete.
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of antique Rome,
Go forth and fetch their conqu'ring Cæsar in.
As by a low, but loving like shew'd,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him. Shakespeare's Henry V.
There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation. Raleigh.

3. Probability; verisimilitude; appearance of truth.
As it noteth one such to have been in that age, so had there

LIK

there been moe; it would by likelihood as well have noted many.
Many of likelihood informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdoubt.
Hooker, b. ii.
Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

It never yet did hurt,
To lay down likelihood, and forms of hope. Shakespeare.
As there is no likelihood that the place could be so altered, so there is no probability that these rivers were turned out of their courses.
Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Where things are least to be put to the venture, as the eternal interests of the other world ought to be; there every, even the least, probability, or likelihood of danger, should be provided against.
South's Sermons.

There are predictions of our Saviour recorded by the Evangelists, which were not completed till after their deaths, and had no likelihood of being in when they were pronounced by our blessed Saviour.
Addison on the Christian Religion.

Thus, in all likelihood, would it be with a libertine, who should have a visit from the other world: the first horror it raised would go off, as new diversions come on.
Atterbury.

LIKELY, adj. [from like.]
1. Such as may be liked; such as may please. Obsolete.
These young companions make themselves believe they love at the first looking of a likely beauty.

Nymphs and shepherds dance no more
By sandy Ladon's lilied banks.
Milton.

LILY, n. f. [lilium, Latin.]
The lily hath a bulbous root, consisting of several fleshy scales adhering to an axis; the stalk is greatly furnished with leaves; the flower is composed of six leaves, and is shaped somewhat like a bell: in some species the petals are greatly reflexed, but in others but little; from the centre of the flower rises the pointal, which becomes an oblong fruit, commonly triangular, divided into three cells, and full of compressed seeds, which are bordered, lying upon each other in a double row. There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, red lilies, and martagons of various sorts.
Müller.

Oh I had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them;
He would not then have touch'd them for his life. Shakespeare.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
Almost no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

Arnus, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce.
Peasam on Drawing.

Take but the humblest lily of the field;
And if our pride will to our reason yield;
It must by sure comparison be shown,
That on the regal seat great David's son,
Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r,
Shines with less glory than that simple flower.
Prior.

Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs along:
For her the feather'd quires forget their song,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

LILY-DAFFODIL, n. f. [lilio-narcissus.] A foreign flower.
LILY-HYACINTH, n. f. [lilio-hyacinthus.]

As they please,
They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size
Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare. Milton.

2. To tear asunder; to dismember.
LI'MBECK, n. f. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from alambick.] A still.
Her cheeks, on which this streaming nectar fell,
Still'd through the limbeck of her diamond eyes. Fairfax.

LIM

All others from all things draw all that's good,
Life, soul, form, spirit, where they being have;
I, by love's limbeck.
Donne.

Fires of Spain, and the line,
Whose countries limbecks to our bodies be,
Canst thou for gain bear?
Donne.

Call up, unbound,
In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,
Drain'd through a limbeck to his naked form. Milton.

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Hawell.
He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbecks rise,
It would in richer showers descend again. Dryden.

The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philipi.
LI'MBED, adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.
A fleet of five years age, large limb'd, and fed,
To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led. Pope's Iliad.

LI'MBER, adj. Flexible; easily bent; pliant; lithe.
You put me off with limber vows. Shakespeare.
I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state,
Edward Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line: but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear. Watson.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans
For wings; and smallest lineaments exact
In all the liveries deck'd of Summer's pride. Milton.

She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long soft limber ears to defend her. More on Atheism.
The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the oesophagus, very limber. Ray on Creation.

At last the ulcer is covered over with a limber callus. Harv.

LI'MBO, n. f. [lao quod sit limbus inferorum.] Du Gange.

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.
N, he is in tartar limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
One whose hard hand is button'd up with steel. Shakespeare.

Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss. Shakespeare.
All these up-whirl'd aloft
Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
Into a limbo large, and broad, since call'd
The paradise of fools. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

2. Any place of misery and restraint.
For he no sooner was at large,
But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
And in the self-same limbo put
The knight and squire, where he was shut. Hudibras.

Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
LIME, n. f. [lim, xeliman, Saxon; to glue.]

1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.
Poor bird! shouldst thou never fear the net or lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
By wall'd sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows. Shakespeare.
Monster, come put some lime upon your fingers, and away with the rest. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Jollier of this state
Than are new-benefic'd ministers, he throws,
Like nets or lime twigs, whoso'er he goes,
His title of barrister on every wench. Donne.

A poor thrush was taken with a bush of lime twigs.
L'Estrange's Fables.
Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround. Dryden.

Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts
Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows hearts. Pope.

2. Matter of which mortar is made: so called because used in cement.
There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone. Hill's Materia Medica.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side. Bacon's Henry VII.

LIM

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen praise'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
But all admire Inigo Jones. Swift.

LIME is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold; as freestone, &c. Mortimer.
LIME tree, or LINDEN, n. f.
[Lim, Saxon.] The linden tree.

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footstalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes reticulated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue sound many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one, in Norfolk, sixteen yards in circuit. Müller.

Go, gentle gales! and bear my sighs along.
For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

4. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]
Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves;
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Thomson's Summer.

To LIME, v. a. [from lime.]
1. To entangle; to enmesh.
Oh limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Example, that fo terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them. Shakespeare.
The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubeth ev'ry bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. To smear with lime.
Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And place a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shakespeare.
Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them. L'Estrange.

3. To cement.
I will not ruin my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

4. To manure ground with lime.
The reason why they did so was, because of the encouragement which that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming. Chill.
All sorts of pease love limed or marled land. Mortimer.

LI'MEKILN, n. f. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

Proud limitary cherub!

LIMITATION. n. f. [limitation, French; limitatio, Latin.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof.

Am I yourself,
But, as it were, in sort of limitation.

I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir.

This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour, who would look for him amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; if he afterwards consent to limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure.

2. Confinement from a lax or undeterminate import.

The cause of error is ignorance; what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable.

LIMMER. n. f. A mongrel.

To limmer, v. a. [enluminer, French, to adorn books with pictures.] To draw; to paint any thing.

My eye doth his effigies witness,
Most truly limm'd, and living in your face.

How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limm'd in their unaffected bravery?

LIMNER. n. f. [corrupted from enluminer, a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limners at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so inerringly, according to the idea of its kind.

Poets are limners of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;

Words are the paint by which their thoughts are shown,
And nature is their object to be drawn.

LIMOUS. adj. [limosus, Latin.] Muddy; slimy.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees unto a firm land.

They esteemed this natural melancholick acidity to be the limous or slimy feculent part of the blood.

To limp, v. n. [limpen, Saxon.] To halt; to walk lamely.

An old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step

Limp'd in pure love.

Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping fire.

The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprising it; so far this shadow

Doth limp behind the substance.

When Plutus, which is riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot.

Limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.

The limping smith observ'd the fadden'd scaff,
And hopping here and there put in his word.

Can syllogism set things right?
No: majors soon with minors fight:
Or both in friendly consort join'd,
The consequence limps false behind.

LIMPET. n. f. A kind of shell fish.

LIMPID. adj. [limpidus, French; limpidus, Lat.] Clear; pure; transparent.

One a hard oak, a softer linden one.

LINE. n. f. [linea, Latin.]

1. Longitudinal extension.

Even the planets, upon this principle, must gravitate no more towards the Sun; so that they would not revolve in curve lines, but fly away in direct tangents, till they struck against other planets.

2. A slender string.

Well sung the Roman bard; all human things,
Of dearest value, hang on slender strings;
O see the then sole hope, and in design
Of heav'n our joy, supported by a line.

A line seldom holds to strein, or draws straight in length, above fifty or sixty feet.

3. A thread extended to direct any operations.

We as by line upon the ocean go,
Whose paths shall be familiar as the land.

Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Ermengere.

O that your brows my laurel had sustain'd!
Well had I been depos'd if you had reign'd:
The father had descended for the son;
For only you are lineal to the throne.

LINEALLY. adv. [from lineal.] In a direct line.

If he had been the person upon whom the crown had lineally and rightfully descended, it was good law.

LINEAMENT. n. f. [lineamentum, French; lineamentum, Latin.] Feature; discriminating mark in the form.

When that my mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York
Found that the issue was not his begot:

LIN

Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke, my father.

In companions
There must needs be a like proportion

Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit.

Six wings he wore, to shade
His lineaments divine.

Man he seems
In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine.

There are not more differences in mens faces, and the outward lineaments of their bodies, than there are in the makes and tempers of their minds; only there is this difference, that the distinguishing characters of the face, and the lineaments of the body, grow more plain with time, but the peculiar physiognomy of the mind is most discernible in children.

Advance religion and morals, by tracing some few lineaments in the character of a lady, who hath spent all her life in the practice of both.

The utmost force of boiling water is not able to destroy the structure of the tenderest plant: the lineaments of a white lily will remain after the strongest decoction.

The Roman state, whose course will yet go on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong links afunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment. Shakep.

The moral of that poetical fiction, that the uppermost link of all the series of subordinate causes, is fastened to Jupiter's chair, signifies an useful truth. Hale.

Truths hang together in a chain of mutual dependance; you cannot draw one link without attracting others. Glanville.

While she does her upward flight sustain,
Touching each link of the continued chain,
At length she is oblig'd and forc'd to see
A first, a source, a life, a deity. Prior.

2. Any thing doubled and closed together.

Make a link of horse hair very strong, and fasten it to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. A chain; any thing connecting.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakep.

The link of nature draw me; flesh of flesh,
Bone of my bone thou art. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

Fire, flood and earth, and air, by this were bound,
And love, the common link, the new creation crown'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

4. Any single part of a series or chain of consequences; a gradation in ratiocination; a proposition joined to a foregoing and following proposition.

The thread and train of consequences in intellectual ratiocination is often long, and chained together by divers links, which cannot be done in imaginative ratiocination by some attributed to brutes. Judge Hale.

5. A series: this sense is improper. Addison has used link for chain.

LIN

Though I have here only chosen this single link of martyr, I might find out others among those names which are still extant, that delivered down this account of our Saviour in a successive tradition. Addison on the Christian Religion.

6. [From λύχνος.] A torch made of pitch and hards.

O, thou art an everlasting bonfire light; thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern. Shakep. Henry IV.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. Havel.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he fails behind his link. Dryden.

One that bore a link
On a sudden clapp'd his flaming cudgel,
Like *Link*stock, to the horse's touch-hole. Hudibras, p. ii.

7. Perhaps in the following passage it may mean lamp-black.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat;
And Walter's dagger was not come from theaching. Shak.

To LINK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate; as, the links of a chain.

Descending tread us down
Thus drooping; or with linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milt. Par. Lost.

Against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs;
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce
In notes, with many a winding thought
Of linked sweetness long drawn out. Milton.

2. To unite; to conjoin in concord.

They're so link'd in friendship,
That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter. Shakep.

3. To join.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
Inclose whole downs in walls, 'tis all a joke. Pope's H.

So from the first eternal order ran,
And creature link'd to creature, man to man. Pope.

4. To join by confederacy or contract.

They make an offer of themselves into the service of that enemy, with whose servants they link themselves in to near a bond. Hooker, b. ii.

Be advised for the best,
Ere thou thy daughter link in holy band
Of wedlock, to that new unknown guest. Fairy Queen.

Blood in princes link'd not in such sort,
As that it is of any pow'r to tie. Daniel's Civil War.

5. To connect.

New hope to spring
Out of despair; joys, but with fear yet link'd. Milton.

God has link'd our hopes and our duty together. Dec. of Pl.

So gracious hath God been to us, as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very things the instances of our obedience, which are the natural means and causes of our happiness. Tillotson's Sermon.

6. To unite or concatenate in a regular series of consequences.

These things are linked, and, as it were, chained one to another: we labour to eat, and we eat to live, and we live to do good; and the good which we do is as seed sown, with reference unto a future harvest. Hooker, b. i.

Tell me, which part it does necessitate?
I chuse the other; there I'll link th' effect;
A chain, which fools to catch themselves project! Dryd.

By which chain of ideas thus visibly linked together in train, i. e. each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

LINKBOY. n. f. [link and boy.] A boy that carries a torch to accommodate passengers with light.

What a ridiculous thing it was, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous disclusions of light, to prevent the officiousness of the linkboy. Mary's Divine Dialogues.

Though thou art tempted by the linkman's call,
Yet trust him not along the lonely wall. Gay.

In the black form of cinder wench the came.
O may no linkboy interrupt their love. Gay's Trivia.

LINNET. n. f. [linet, French.] A small singing bird.

The swallows make use of celandine, the linnet of euphrasia, for the repairing of their light. Moré's Antidote.

Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat?
LINSEED. n. f. [from lin, Latin.] The seed of flax, which is much used in medicine.

Take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the basin, and strike the lintel and the two side posts. Exod.

When you lay any timber on brick work, as lintels over windows, lay them in loam, which is a great preserver of timber. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

Silver the lintels deep projecting o'er,
And gold the ringlets that command the door. Pope's Ody.

LION. n. f. [lion, French; leo, Latin.] The fiercest and most magnanimous of fourfooted beasts.

King Richard's surname was Cor-de-Lion, for his lion-like courage. Camden's Remains.

Dismay'd not this
Our captains Macbeth and Banquo? — Yes, Shakep.

As sparrows, eagles, or the hare, the lion.
Be lion mettle'd; proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who fies, or where conspirers are;
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be. Shakep. Macbeth.

The sphinx, a famous monster in Egypt, had the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peasam on Drawing.

Each with their kind, lion with lioness;
So fitly they in pairs thou hast combin'd. Milt. Pa. Lost.

The lion for the honours of his kin,
The squeezing crab, and stinging scorpion shine
For aiding heaven, when giants dar'd to brave
The threaten'd stars. Creesh's Manilius.

See lion hearted Richard,
Piously valiant, like a torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that diffains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves Within its sweep trees, houses, men, he pres'd, Amidst the thickest battle. Philips.

LIONESS. n. f. [feminine of lion.] A she lion.

Under which bush's shade, a lioness
Lay couching head on ground, with catlike watch
When that the sleeping man should stir. Shakep.

LYTERAL. adj. [literal, French; litera, Latin.]

1. According to the primitive meaning, not figurative.

Through all the writings of the ancient fathers, we see that the words, which were, do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the letter, is accomplished in the truth.

A foundation, being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building, nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence. Hammond.

2. Following the letter, or exact words.

The fittest for public audience are such as, following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrases, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning.

3. Consisting of letters; as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.

LITERAL. n. f. Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession.

LITERALLY. adv. [from literal.]

1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.

That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend the meaning of; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible.

2. With close adherence to words.

Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Mezentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

LITERALITY. n. f. [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true deuterocopy and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not sometimes perurbed by fire beyond their literalities. Brown.

LITERATI. n. f. [Italian.] The learned.

I shall consult some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the longitude.

LITERATURE. n. f. [literatura, Latin.] Learning; skill in letters.

When men of learning are add'd by a knowledge of the world, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness.

LITHARGE. n. f. [litharge, French; lithargyrum, Latin.]

Litharge is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recement is of two kinds, litharge of gold, and litharge of silver. It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The litharge sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. It is used in ointments and plasters, and is drying, abtergent, and slightly attritive. Hill's Mat. Med.

I have seen some parcels of glass adhering to the test or cupel as well as the gold or litharge. Boyle.

If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call litharge of silver. Boyle.

LITHE. adj. [lithe, Saxon.] Limber; flexible; pliant; easily bent.

Th' unwieldy elephant,

To make them mirth, us'd all his might, and wreath'd

His lithe proboscis. Milton's Paradise Lost.

LITHENESS. n. f. [from lithe.] Limberness; flexibility.

LITHER. adj. [from lithe.] Soft; pliant.

Thou antick, death,

Two Talbots winged through the lithe sky,

In thy despatch shall 'scape mortality. Shakespeare.

4. Not much. The tongue of the just is as choice silver; the heart of the wicked is little worth. Prov. x. 20.

Finding him little studious, she chose rather to endue him with conversative qualities of youth; as, dancing and fencing. Watts.

That poem was infamously bad; this parallel is little better. Dryden's Discrepancy.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons were very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

LITTLENESS. n. f. [from little.] 1. Smallness of bulk.

All trying, by a love of littleness, To make abridgments, and to draw to less; Even that nothing which at first we were. Donne.

We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthy particles, so as many of them might float in the air. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Meanness; want of grandeur. The English and French, in verse, are forced to raise their language with metaphors, by the pompousness of the whole phrase, to wear off any littleness that appears in the particular parts. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. Want of dignity. The angelick grandeur, by being concealed, does not awaken our poverty, nor mortify our littleness so much, as it was always displayed. Collier of Eury.

LITTOREAL. v. a. [littoria, Latin.] Belonging to the shore. LITURGY. n. f. [liturgia, Latin; liturgy, Fr.] Form of prayers; formulary of public devotions.

We dare not admit any such form of liturgy, as either appointeth no scripture at all, or very little to be read in the church. Hosker, b. v.

The blessedness of mortal vigils began to be importuned, so that a great part of divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Howell.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy and means of impetration in this world. Taylor.

To LIVE. v. n. [lypan, Lyngan, Saxon.] 1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.

She shall be A pattern to all princes living with her, And all that shall succeed. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame, That darkness does the face of earth intomb, When living day should kiss it? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To have the living, and revenge the dead, Against one warrior's arms all Troy they led. Dryden.

2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits; good or ill, happiness or misery. O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest. Ecclesi. xii. 1.

Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Hayward.

The condition required of us is a conjunction of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not willfully lived and died in. Hammond.

A late prelate, of a remarkable zeal for the church, were religions to be tried by lives, would have lived down pope, and the whole consistory. Atterbury.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Addison's Spectator, N. 162.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life. Our high-plac'd Macbeth Shall live the lease of nature, and pay his breath To time and mortal custom. Shakespeare.

See the minutes how they run; How many makes the hour full complete, How many hours bring about the day, How many days will finish up the year, How many years a mortal man may live. Shakespeare.

The way to live long must be, to use our bodies so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Ray on Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness. What greater curse could envious fortune give, Than just to die when I began to live. Dryden.

5. To

To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual. My statutes and judgments, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.

He died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. 1 Thes. v. 10.

6. To remain undestroyed. It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burnet.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise, And what collected night involves the skies! Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea, Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

7. To continue; not to be lost. Mens civil manners live in brags, their virtues We write in water. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Sounds which address the ear are lost and die In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye Lives long upon the mind; the faithful light Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace. There high in air memorial of my name Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit. The shepherd Iwain shall dance and sing, For thy delight each May morning. If these delights thy mind may move, Then live with me, and be my love. Shakespeare.

9. To feed. Those animals that live upon other animals have their flesh more alkalescent than those that live upon vegetables. Arbut.

10. To maintain one's self. A most notorious thief; lived all his life-time of spoils and robberies. Spenser.

They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.

His treasure and goods were all seized upon, and a small portion thereof appointed for his poor wife to live upon. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

The number of soldiers can never be great in proportion to that of people, no more than the number of those that are idle in a country, to that of those who live by labour. Temple.

He had been most of his time in good service, and had something to live on now he was old. Temple.

11. To be in a state of motion or vegetation. In a spacious cave of living stone, The tyrant Æolus, from his airy throne, With pow'r imperial curbs the struggling winds. Dryden.

Cool groves and living lakes Give after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

12. To be unextinguished. Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw: These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour, Then on the living coals red wine they pour. Dryden.

LIVE. adj. [from alive.] 1. Quick; not dead. If one man's ox hurt another that he die, they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money. Exod. xxi. 35.

2. Active; not extinguished. A louder sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the saltpetre upon casting of a live coal upon it. Boyle.

LIVELESS. adv. [from live.] Wanting life; rather lifeless. Description cannot suit itself in words, To demonstrate the life of such a battle, In life to liveless as it shews itself. Shakespeare's Henry V.

LIVELINESS. n. f. [It appears to me corrupted from liveliness.] Support of life; maintenance; means of living. Ah! luckless babe! born under cruel star, And in dead parents' baleful arms bred; Full little weenest thou what sorrows are, Left thee for portion of thy liveliness. Fairy Queen.

That rebellion drove the lady from thence, to find a liveliness out of her own estate. Chaucer, b. viii.

He brings disgrace upon his character, to submit to the picking up of a liveliness in that strolling way of canting and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profession and liveliness to get their living by those practices, for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. South's Sermons.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a liveliness where they can find it. Addison's Spect.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest liveliness: the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addison's Freeholder, N. 42.

LIVELINESS. n. f. [from live.] 1. Appearance of life. That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden's Dryf.

2. Vivacity; sprightliness. Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness and spirit, come sometimes to be let right, and so make able and great men; but tame and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke on Education.

LIVELINESS. n. f. [live and lode, from lead; the means of leading life.] Maintenance; support; livelihood. She gave like blessing to each creature, As well of worldly livelode as of life, That there might be no difference nor strife. Hubbard.

LIVELONG. adj. [live and long.] Tedious; long in passing. Many a time, and oft, Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements, Your infants in your arms; and there have fate The livelong day, with patient expectation To see great Pompey pass. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The obscur'd bird clamour'd the livelong night. Shakespeare.

Young and old come forth to play, On a sun-shine holiday, Till the livelong day-light fail. Milton.

Seek for pleasure to destroy The sorrows of this livelong night. Prior.

How could she fit the livelong day, Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

2. Lasting; durable. Thou, in our wonder and astonishment, Hast built thyself a livelong monument. Milton.

LIVELY. adj. [live and like.] 1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious. But wherefore comes old Manoa in such haste, With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while He seems; supposing here to find his son, Or of him bringing to us some glad news? Milton's Ag.

2. Gay; airy. Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. Representing life. Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater. Dryden's Discrepancy.

4. Strong; energetic. His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be brightened and stirred up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South's Sermons.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense and lively, than those of natural bodies. Newton's Opticks.

Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state. Atterbury's Sermons.

LIVELY. } adv. 1. Briskly; vigorously. They brought their men to the slough, who discharging lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them. Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life. That part of poetry must needs be best, which describes most lively our actions and passions, our virtues and our vices. Dryden's Pref. to his State of Innocence.

LIVER. n. f. [from live.] 1. One who lives. Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear, Guided to what may great or good appear, And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

2. One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness or misery. The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian livers over the whole world. Hammond's Fund.

If any loose liver have any goods of his own, the sheriff is to seize thereupon. Spenser on Ireland.

Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented. Atterbury.

3. [From liver, Saxon.] One of the entrails. With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come: And let my liver rather heat with wine, Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakespeare.

Reason and respect Make livers pale, and lividness dejected. Shakespeare.

LIVERCOLOUR. adj. [liver and colour.] Dark red. The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, livercolour. Woodward.

LIVERGROWN. adj. [liver and grown.] Having a great liver. I inquired what other casualties was most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest. Grant.

LIVERWORT. n. f. [liver and wort.] A plant. That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is shot, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spends spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour.

LIVERY. n. f. [from liver, French.]

1. The act of giving or taking possession.

You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,

Call in his letters patents that he hath

By his attorneys general to sue

His livery, and deny his offered homage.

2. Release from wardship.

Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgment. K. Charles.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horse meat; as they commonly use the word stabling, as to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly food; so in great houses, the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink; and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure: so it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is meant horse meat, like as by the cognizance is understood man's meat. Some say it is derived of coin, for that they used in their cognizances not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the Irish, the which is a common use amongst landlords of the Irish to have a common spending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they used to take of them what victuals they list; for of victuals they were wont to make a small reckoning. Spenser on Ireland.

4. The cloaths given to servants.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats affordeth. Hooker.

I think, it is our way,

If we will keep in favour with the king,

To be her men, and wear her livery. Shaksp. Rich. III.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,

That see I by our faces. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

Ev'ry lady cloath'd in white,

And crown'd with oak and laurel ev'ry knight,

Are servants to the leaf, by liveries known

Of innocence. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

On others int'rest her gay livery flings,

Int'rest that waves on party-colour'd wings;

Turn'd to the sun she casts a thousand dyes,

And as she turns the colours fall or rise. Dunciad.

If your dinner miscarries, you were seized by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladle-ful of broth on one or two of their liveries. Swift.

5. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green,

Proudly bedeck'd in April's livery. Sidney.

Mistake me not for my complexion

The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,

To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Shaksp.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,

Infect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans,

For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,

In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride,

With spots of gold and purple, azure, green. Milton.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey

Had in her sober livery all things clad. Mil. Pa. Left.

LIVERYMAN. n. f. [livery and man.]

1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferior kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liverymen frequently railing at their mistresses. Arbutnot.

2. [In London.] A freeman of some standing in a company.

LIVES. n. f. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant strives,

In a farm house, or field, to have three lives. Donne.

LIVID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide, French.] Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mass of the blood not being tainted. Bacon.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:

O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,

Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

LIVIDITY. n. f. [lividitas, French; from livid.] Discolouration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance. Arbutnot on Aliments.

LIVING. n. f. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

LOA

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place, having no success but in their hands; the Helots, as in their own place, fighting for their livings, wives, and children. Sidney.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living. Mark.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting some body or other, in some cases. L'Estrange's Fables.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make. Hubbard's Tale.

Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living. Shaksp.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,

Or shortly you'll dig for your living. Denham.

Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Speiser.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs.

Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections. Arbutnot.

LIVELY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whole temper pollutes themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

LIVRE. n. f. [French.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our shilling.

LIXIVIAL. adj. [from lixivium, Latin.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine. Arbutnot.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Helmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alkalizate form. Boyle.

LIXIVIATE. adj. [lixivieux, French; from lixivium.] Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixivated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

Lixivate salts, to which pot ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, dispose of them to part readily with their tincture. Boyle.

LIXIVUM. n. f. [Lat.] Lye; water impregnated with salt of whatsoever kind; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants. Boyle.

LIZARD. n. f. [lizard, French; lacertus, Latin.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten sometimes in Arabia and Judæa, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures. Calmet.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,

Mark'd by the devilines to be avoided,

As venomous toads, or lizards dreadful stings. Shaksp.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owl's wing. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

LIZARDIT. n. f. A plant.

LIZARDSTONE. n. f. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

L.L.D. n. f. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

LO. interj. [la, Saxon.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of sight;

sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood. Shaksp.

Lo! within a ken our army lies.

Now must the world point at poor Catharine,

And say, lo! there is mad Petrucchio's wife. Shaksp.

Lo! I have a weapon,

A better never did itself sustain

Upon a soldier's thigh. Shaksp.

Thou did'st utter,

I am yours for ever.

—Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice. Shaksp.

For lo! he hung the world's stupenduous birth. Roscom.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine

To blast our bold design. Dryden's Albion.

LOACH. n. f. [loche, French.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length:

he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattels like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots: his his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gensler, and other learned physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be filled with a very small worm, at the bottom, for he very seldom or never rises above the gravel. Walton's Angler.

LOAD. n. f. [blave, Saxon.]

1. A burthen; a freight; lading.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,

And fought his wonted shelter. Dryden's Nun's Tale.

2. Any thing that depresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant. Ray on Creation.

3. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. L'Estrange.

To LOAD. v. a. [blaban, Saxon.]

1. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils,

Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shaksp.

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the beast. Isa. xlv. 1.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others. Locke.

3. To charge a gun.

A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wifeman.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, laden with death, still sounds

In my stunned ears. Addison's Cato.

LOAD. n. f. [more properly lade, as it was anciently written from laean, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Their manner of working in the load mines, is to follow the load as it lieth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

LOADER. n. f. [from load.] He who loads.

LOADSMAN. n. f. [lade and man.] He who leads the way; a

In equal curls, and well-conspir'd, to deck
With shining ringlets her smooth ivory neck. Pope.

LoCUST. n. f. [from locusta, Latin.]
The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Africa, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fell like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with. Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries. Calm.

To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast. Exod.
